Pinoy doc in Toronto alive

Confined in critical care unit of hospital

By Carla P. Gomez
PDI Visayas Bureau

THE FILIPINO-CANADIAN doctor, who was reported to have died of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome in a hospital in Toronto, Canada, last week, is alive, his medical secretary told the INQUIRER on Tuesday night.

The confusion among members of the Filipino-Canadian community in Metro Toronto over whether the doctor had died or not was due to the policy of Canadian health authorities against releasing names of SARS patients and fatalities.

The doctor's secretary at his clinic in Scarborough City in the eastern part of Metro Toronto, told the INQUIRER in a telephone interview that the confusion arose after the death of another SARS patient at the Sunnybrook Health Science Center where the doctor is confined and reportedly recuperating.

The secretary said the doctor, whom she described as in his 50s, developed chills and exhibited other symptoms of SARS on the night of April 4, and was brought to the Sunnybrook Health Science Center.

Two international news agencies also reported the death of the Toronto doctor on Monday, citing two Philippine health officials.

The Associated Press quoted Health Secretary Manuel Dayrit as saying that the "physician in

8th Filipino down with SARS in Hong Kong

By Cherry Velarde

HONG KONG—The number of Filipinos with Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) in Hong Kong has increased to eight.

The latest victim is a middle-aged male who has been confined at the Pamela Youde Nethersole Eastern Hospital since last week, according to Philippine Consul General Victoria Bataclan.

She said the patient was now in "stable condition."

It was not known how he contracted the disease. No other details were given to protect the patient's privacy.

The consulate received another reported SARS case involving a domestic helper but Bataclan said this could not yet be included in the official tally because the case has not been confirmed by the Hong Kong health department.

According to official data, of the total eight Filipino SARS cases, one has died (domestic helper Adela Dalingay); three are still in the hospital (including the male patient), and four have recovered and have been discharged from the hospital.

"The number of cases has increased, if you look at zero to eight, but I would not say this is a trend," said Bataclan.

Nine Filipino SARS cases had been reported in Singapore as of two weeks ago, according to the Department of Labor and Employment. Of the nine, five have been discharged from the hospital.

'We're treated like outcasts in our own land'

By Yolanda Sotelo-Fuertes
PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

ALCALA, Pangasinan—"We feel like outcasts in our own land," said a 67-year-old man who has lived all his life in Barangay Vacante, home village of Adela Catalan who died of probable Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) on April 14.

A 22-year-old resident said: "The way we are treated by other people is annoying, even insulting. It's as if we're lepers, and people turn aside when they see us coming."

The municipal council here yesterday declared a state of health emergency in Barangay Vacante, where three zones are under quarantine by order of the Department of Health.

With the declaration, the barangay can use the town's calamity fund to buy provisions for the food and household needs of residents covered by the quarantine period that is to last until April 26, Mayor Juanito Collado said.

But he said the state of health emergency would cover the entire Vacante (pop: 696 as of the 2000 census), about 7 kilometers from the Alcala town proper.

In Pasay City, President Macapagal-Arroyo expressed "regret" at the "tragedy that has befallen" the woman's family, but upheld the quarantine imposed on Vacante.

Anti-SARS measures fail; 16 more dead

HONG KONG—China yesterday sent out special squads to round up people showing SARS symptoms and Singapore vowed to jail citizens breaking quarantine orders as various governments adopted increasingly desperate measures to contain the killer epidemic.

Despite the global drive, the flu-like virus showed no signs of slowing; sixteen more people died from Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome and hundreds of new SARS cases surfaced.

China on Wednesday reported nine new deaths from atypical pneumonia, raising the SARS death toll on the mainland to 106. Six new deaths pushed Hong Kong's death toll to 105. A 64-year-old man hospitalized as a probable SARS patient died in Ontario late Tuesday, bringing Canada's death toll to 15.

FOR ADELA CATALON, the second homecoming turned out to be the last.

She spent more than 20 of her 46 years in Canada working as a nursing attendant. The first time she returned to her native Alcala in Pangasinan was 10 years ago, and the second time was for good.

She arrived on April 5, in time to attend the high school graduation of a niece whom she had promised to put through college. But with her death at the San Lazaro Hospital on April 14—a probable SARS case—that promise will go unfulfilled.

GMA orders DOJ to probe Mindoro murders

By Christian V. Esguerra

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo has ordered an investigation of the murder of two human rights activists in Oriental Mindoro blamed on the military.

Speaking before the graduation rites of around 26,000 barangay watchers in Pasay yesterday, Ms Macapagal said she had directed Justice Secretary Simeon Datumanong to look into the killing of Eden Marcellana and Eddie Gumanoy.

Marcellana was secretary general of the human rights watchdog Karapatan in Southern Tagalog and Gumanoy was chair of the Katipunan ng mga Samahang Magbubukid sa Tinog Katagalugan (Kasama-TK).

Datumanong, head of the presidential committee on human rights, has formed a task force led by Justice Undersecretary Jose Calida to investigate the murders.

"We're concerned about charges of vigilantism being aired in relation (to) the killing of activists in Mindoro Oriental," the President said. "When there are such charges, authorities must step in to get to the root of the matter soonest."

On Monday night, masked men supposedly belonging to Alsa Masa, an anti-communist vigilante group, abducted Marcellana, Gumanoy and three others in Naujan

Ads depict Ping as hero

By Christine O. Avendaño

FIVE television advertisements that depicted him as a modern-day hero were the work of his supporters, Sen. Panfilo Lacson admitted yesterday.

But he insisted that these had nothing to do with his presidential bid next year.

The ads series aired for a month starting March 6 in the vote-rich provinces of Baguio, Davao, Iloilo, Leyte, Tacloban and Bicol. In Metro Manila, they started airing Easter Sunday, and were expected to have their last run yesterday.

Lacson said the commercials were merely meant to counter "black propaganda" being waged against him.

"I have the right to defend myself," Lacson told reporters, as he shrugged off comments about the series being seen by critics as consisting an early political campaign.

"They can say what they want," said Lacson, pointing out that nowhere in the ads were viewers asked to vote for him.

The commercials were carried by ABS-CBN, Net 25 and Channel 13. A source from Lacson's camp said GMA-7 ran them in the provinces but not in Metro Manila.

Four of the ads showed people relating how Lacson had helped them when he was with the Philippine National Police. Among them was businesswoman Robina Gokongwei, who told of Lacson's role in her rescue from kidnappers in 1981. The fifth had Lacson's son Jeric lamenting how his father was being accused of many misdeeds.

SHELLING IN PIKIT

Moro rebs attack in Gloria's wake

COTABATO CITY—Five Moro Islamic Liberation Front rebels were killed as the group went on a rampage during a visit by President Macapagal-Arroyo, the military said Wednesday.

MILF fighters fired two mortar rounds at government troops stationed in Fort Pikit, as soon as the President left the North Cotabato town on Tuesday afternoon.

Two soldiers were wounded, according to provincial military chief Major General Generoso Senga.

Senior Insp. Glicerio Ragudo, Pikit police chief, said the mortar was fired around 4 p.m. from Bulul village, some two kilometers away.

Before the attack, Ms Macapagal was in Barangay Bagoing, about four kilometers from Bulul, to personally oversee the return of residents displaced by the military offensive against the separatist rebels, which started on Feb. 11.

"The MILF was trying to disrupt the visit of the President," Senga said. But other military officials said the shelling was not intended for Ms Macapagal.

Col. Cardozo Luna, commander of the Army's 602nd Infantry Brigade, said it was part of the MILF's harassment campaign against soldiers in Pikit.

MILF spokesperson Eid Kabalu admitted that his group fired the two mortars, but would not say if this was linked to the President's visit.

Five MILF rebels were killed in a separate attack on a detachment of Army special forces in the town of Sultan-sa-Barangis, Maguindanao, according to local army brigade commander Col. Agustin Dimaala.

A belated report sent to Camp Aguinaldo said about 150 MILF men led by Commanders Edu Maulana and Ustadz Wahid Halil opened fire on the 41st Special Forces Company headquarters in the Reina Regente complex. The attack triggered a two-hour firefight, in which four soldiers were wounded.

The report did not identify the wounded soldiers.

Shortly before Ms Macapagal arrived in Pikit on Tuesday, four Marines securing the area where her helicopter was to land were injured in the explosion of a suspected land mine. The military could not confirm which group was behind the blast.

The MILF suggested that it could have been caused by one of many unexploded bombs dropped from Air Force planes during the recent military offensive.

Kabalu likewise denied it was his group that torched a Christian church and 10 houses in Barangay Kiga in South Upi, also in Maguindanao.

Senga said militiamen tried but failed to prevent some 50 suspects from harassing the villagers. He said the men also carted away at least 15 farm animals belonging to the residents.

Kabalu believed it was the work of bandits. "We respect churches and we are not engaged in cattle rustling," he said.

North Cotabato Gov. Emmanuel Pifol has urged Ms Macapagal to pressure the MILF into negotiations, saying "any activity undertaken in the name of peace" should be directed to the group.

Meanwhile, Luna said government troops were bracing for more attacks, as the MILF seemed to be "feeling the pinch" of the military presence in the area. Edwin O. Fernandez and Rosa-May V. de Gusman, PDI Mindanao Bureau, with Martin P. Marfil and a report from AFP

GMA not covered by SARS quarantine

By Carlito Pablo

UNLESS she volunteers, President Macapagal-Arroyo is not required to undergo voluntary quarantine when she returns from a one-day summit of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations to be hosted by Thailand on the dreaded Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome.

Health Secretary Manuel Dayrit indicated this in a briefing in Malacañang on government efforts to contain SARS.

At the same time, Manila International Airport Authority general manager Edgardo Manda warned yesterday that those who lie about their health conditions at the airport will face stiff sanctions.

He said giving false information in the health checklist for arriving passengers was tantamount to falsification of public documents punishable by law.

In explaining the President's exemption from voluntary quarantine, Dayrit said Thailand was still considered SARS-free.

"Thailand is really SARS free," Dayrit said, noting that while there had been seven suspected cases and two related deaths in that country, there has been "no local transmission" of the disease.

Besides, Dayrit noted, President Macapagal will not be taking a commercial flight but rather fly on board a Lear jet for the April 29 SARS summit among the 10 Asean state leaders in Bangkok.

"Strictly speaking if the President goes there, there's no SARS there," Dayrit said.

Dayrit said that the need for Ms Macapagal to quarantine herself has to be balanced with what he called as the "exigencies and demands of her job."

Dayrit also noted that the policy of requiring people to undergo quarantine applies only to those who came from SARS-infected countries.

Dayrit defended President Macapagal's acceptance of Thailand's invitation for a summit on SARS, a disease that has been claiming scores of victims in various countries.

"There's a lot to gain from this meeting," he said. "This I think is a necessary travel."

The government's SARS management team has drawn up a five-point plan to address the SARS threat.

These are to prevent or minimize the entry of "imported SARS cases," prevent local spread of SARS cases, prevent mortality through effective clinical management, public education and to "manage media and non-health consequences of SARS" like its impact on tourism.

In the same briefing, Manda said that the government is acquiring three Singapore-made body heat sensors to be installed at the airport.

Manda said that each sensor, originally designed for military purposes, costs from $50,000 to $68,000.

The airport manager also warned that arriving passengers who give false information about their health condition would be sanctioned.

He had recommended to Dayrit the issuance of an order that would penalize those who would try to hide any symptoms of respiratory tract infection on the health checklist issued by the department to arriving passengers at the arrival area of the Naia.

"I am strongly looking at the possibility of penalizing passengers entering false data about their health on the checklist. That's why I am seeking the help of the health department to come up with stricter guidelines," he said.

He said passengers who lie to health officers must not only be penalized, but must also be charged with falsification of public documents.

He advised passengers not to take for granted the health checklist, saying it is an official record duly recognized by government agencies and medical practitioners in corroborating if an arriving passenger from SARS-infected countries do not carry the virus.

He also warned passengers that the airport's medical team and health department are using highly sophisticated equipment to check if a person is a suspected SARS victim.

Dr. John Simons, a British consultant on infectious diseases who recently visited the country, recommended the legislation of laws on SARS prevention.

Manda said it is more practical to put more teeth on the Quarantine Law by the Department of Health.

"At this point in time, legislation would be a very tedious process," he said.

He added the government must take proactive approaches in preventing the SARS virus from contaminating the public.

Saudi bars pilgrims from SARS areas

RIYADH—Saudi Arabia, home to Islam's holiest shrines, has stopped issuing umrah, or minor pilgrimage, visas to Muslims in the Far East because of fears over Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS), an official said Wednesday.

Saudi missions in China, Singapore, Hong Kong and the Philippines have been instructed to stop issuing umrah visas indefinitely, Undersecretary of the hajj (pilgrimage) ministry, Mohammad Bentin told Okaz daily.

Muslims all over the world are granted these visas from Saudi embassies throughout the year, except for the duration of the hajj, which is the main Muslim pilgrimage.

The kingdom earlier this month barred entry to nationals of China, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Singapore and Vietnam as a precautionary measure against SARS.

Travelers arriving from east and south Asian countries would be subjected to stringent screening at the airports and kept under observation for 10 days, the ministry added.

Saudis have been advised against traveling to several Asian countries due to the outbreak of the atypical pneumonia that has claimed more than 234 lives worldwide.

All Muslims are required to make the journey to Mecca at least once in their lifetime if they have the means to do so. AFP

It's Pimentel credibility for Erap's defense

By Volt Contreras

A HIGH ranking state prosecutor yesterday said deposed president Joseph Estrada apparently just wants to ride on Sen. Aquilino Pimentel's credibility in a bid to present questionable pieces of defense evidence relating to the "Jose Velarde" account.

"Definitely he would be used to lend his credibility to the second envelope (of Velarde documents). But I know the good senator can see through this scheme," Special Prosecutor Dennis Villa-Ignacio said.

But Pimentel said Villa-Ignacio should "know better" to suggest such a thing.

Villa-Ignacio was reacting to pronouncements made on Monday by Estrada naming Pimentel as one of the witnesses he would want to tap in his defense.

Pimentel was the Senate President who oversaw the opening of the second envelope on Feb. 14, 2001, days after Estrada's ouster. Earlier, Estrada's Senate impeachment trial ended in the walkout of the House prosecutors after the senator-judges voted 11-10 not to open the envelope.

PIMENTEL: 'I will only state the truth.'

Villa-Ignacio recalled that when the envelope was finally opened, impeachment trial complainants led by human rights lawyer Romulo Kapulong suspected tampering.

One of the items from the envelope which appeared fraudulent to Kapulong was an Aug. 25, 1999 letter purportedly signed by Estrada's crony Jaime Dichaves and addressed to Equitable PCIBank, he said. The letter had Dichaves asking EP-CIB senior vice president Romy Dy Tang to open a savings/current account under the name "Jose Velarde" at the bank's Binondo branch.

Villa-Ignacio described the letter as "part of a cover-up." And at face value, he said, it contains "no categorical statement that the account belonged to Dichaves."

The Estrada camp, though, has long revealed plans to cite the letter in court to prove that Dichaves, not the ex-president, owned the Velarde account.

Estrada is accused of having maintained the account using an alias to hide ill-gotten wealth that included kickbacks, commissions and jueteng payola collections.

Villa-Ignacio said the prosecution panel has no objections to Pimentel being called to the stand, saying the defense lawyers can call in any witness "who they think can help them."

Pimentel, however, said yesterday he won't allow himself to be used by anyone.

"I will only state the truth," Pimentel said.

But Pimentel stressed that if the court is interested to find out the contents of the second envelope, it can merely "subpoena the envelope." With a report from Christine Avendaño

GMA signs P804-B budget; P13B goes to health

By Carlito Pablo

THE GOVERNMENT has allotted P13 billion for "sustaining improvements in health" in this year's P804-billion budget signed into law yesterday by President Macapagal-Arroyo.

The Department of Health, at the forefront in the fight against the deadly Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome, got a P10.4-billion allocation for 2003.

Ms Macapagal earlier set aside a P1-billion contingency fund to control and manage possible SARS outbreaks in the country.

The DOH ranks sixth among agencies which got the biggest chunks of the 2003 budget. Historically, its allocation has always been far lesser than other departments.

The Department of Education got the biggest slice with P106.5 billion, followed by the Public Works and Highways with P53.2 billion, Interior and Local Government with P44.2 billion, National Defense with P42.6 billion and Agriculture with P16.5 billion.

The Department of Transportation and Communications got P9.5 billion; the judiciary, P7.6 billion; the Department of Finance, P6.7 billion; and the Department of Environment and Natural Resources, P6.2 billion.

Malacañang noted yesterday that this year's budget was 2.9 percent bigger than last year's P780.8-billion budget.

It said the 2003 budget commits the government to limit its deficit to P202 billion, or about 4.6 percent of gross domestic product (GDP).

Finance Secretary Isidro Camacho said on Tuesday the budget deficit for the three months of this year to March had already reached P58.9 billion, or 6.7 percent higher than the targeted ceiling for the period.

Budget Secretary Emilia Boncodin said 29.5 percent of the budget would go to social services while economic services would get 20.2 percent. Defense spending would be 5.1 percent of the total.

However, payments and servicing of government loans would amount to P228.7 billion, or 28.4 percent of the total.

Boncodin said the government would maintain growth despite tight spending under the budget, which she described as "modest by many standards but aggressive in the areas that count most."

She said the government would not pump-prime the economy through additional deficit spending.

As part of the deficit control measures, the government is targeting revenue collections of P584.1 billion this year, an increase of three percent over last year.

Boncodin said she was not worried that the budget deficit for January-March exceeded the ceiling.

"I'm very confident we will recover in the second quarter," Preliminary figures indicated that the budget deficit in April will be within the ceiling, she said.

The budget deficit blew out to P212.7 billion in 2002, compared with an original target of P130 billion. It was forced to revise the target upwards due to poor tax collections in the first half of the year.

GMA: Iraq mission not about money

By Christian Esquerro and Carlito Pablo

IT'S about goodwill, not money.

President Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday took a swipe at critics who have been censuring her decision to send humanitarian and peacekeeping forces to war-torn Iraq.

"Let's not frontload the issue of money as if this were a market sale," the President said. "This is about international goodwill and democracy."

Her critics have argued that the money to be used in sending the mission to Iraq can be put to better use within the country—in Mindanao, for instance.

Ms Macapagal defended her post-war Iraq policy in a speech during the graduation of 26,000 village watchmen (barangay tanod) at the Cuneta Astrodome in Pasay City. She even asked the "graduates," who had completed training on police and antiterrorism work, to help explain the policy to the people.

"Our participation in humanitarian and peacekeeping activities must be viewed within the framework of international collaboration," she said. "The terms of reference will be ironed out in due time. (Meanwhile,) we are determined to move on with whatever we have."

The Philippine contingent composed of 300 soldiers, 100 policemen and 100 medical workers is expected to leave on May 15.

Malacañang came under fire after the police hierarchy admitted Monday that the peacekeepers would each receive $3.50 (about P192) daily allowance. Members of the Filipino contingent got $90 each as part of the United Nations' peacekeeping missions in Cambodia, Kosovo and East Timor.

Earlier, Malacañang said the government would shoulder all costs for at least 30 days, after which the United States would foot the bill.

But Foreign Secretary Blas Opie has admitted that the P600-million budget for the contingent had yet to be sourced.

Several senators yesterday questioned the legality and cost of the mission.

"It does not serve the national interest one whit," Sen. Joker Arroyo said in a statement.

Arroyo said the government was apparently sending the troops to please the US, and that this could be "misconstrued by Arab countries as overt intrusion (into) Iraq's affairs."

Sen. Juan Flavier balked at the number of troops to be dispatched.

It was a violation of the Constitution, Sen. Ralph Recto pointed out, "without funding authority from Congress."

Sen. Rodolfo Biazon filed a resolution seeking the Senate foreign relations committee and other committees to probe the government's plan.

But Senate President Franklin Drilon said it was a "policy judgment on the part of the President." With Christine O. Avendaño and Norman Bordadora of the situation," she told hundreds of barangay tanod gathered at the Cuneta Astrodome. "The quarantine of a barangay does not mean that its residents are SARS carriers. It is merely a standard precaution [instituted while] our health authorities determine the facts, which shall be made available to our people."

The President said she was seeking "total cooperation from our people wherever they are."

She again appealed to those who feel they are at risk of having SARS to quarantine themselves and seek assistance from health authorities.

"The welfare of our nation rests upon the sense of duty of each and every citizen," she said.

Ms. Macapagal expressed thanks to the Vacante folk for "submitting" to the quarantine and appreciation for "their discipline and sense of sacrifice for the greater good of the public."

But earlier reports said the villagers were angered by being suspected as SARS carriers and worried about their food and livelihood during the quarantine period.

Food packs

When he visited Vacante yesterday, Collado was informed that the food packs for the residents in the quarantined zones had still to be distributed.

The packs—containing canned goods, rice, noodles, coffee and bath and laundry soap—are expected to last for three days.

"The residents of the other zones were complaining [about their exclusion] in the distribution of food packs, so we decided to declare the entire village under a state of health emergency," the mayor said.

Gov. Victor Agbayani said the provincial government would give material and technical assistance to the quarantined residents.

"We will also prepare food packs for the residents to augment those to be given by the Alcala government," Agbayani said at a meeting on SARS in San Fernando, La Union.

The regional office of the Department of Social Welfare and Development is likewise preparing 1,000 food packs.

Contact tracing

In Manila, the DOH is tracking down those who took the same connecting flight from Japan to Manila as the nursing aide.

They have been identified by health officials from a copy of the flight seating arrangement furnished by Japan Airlines (JAL).

Ruby de Guzman, a JAL executive in Manila, said the airline had fully complied with the request of the DOH in connection with the flight.

"We are prepared to cooperate with the health officials and grant any request so long as they put it in writing," De Guzman told the INQUIRER by phone. "We have already given them everything they requested."

Dr. Antonio Amparo, chief of the Bureau of Quarantine at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport, made the request for the flight seating arrangement to the airline in behalf of the DOH and the National Epidemiology Center on April 21.

In Baguio City, health officials are "contact tracing" five people whom Adela visited before she died.

The officials said the woman contacted the five people in the course of looking for a cancer specialist to treat her father in Alcala. (See story on Page A1.)

'Stay calm'

At the meeting on SARS in San Fernando City, Governor Agbayani appealed to Vacante residents to "stay calm, exercise discipline and be understanding."

"We want to protect Alcala and the rest of the country," he said, adding:

"The quarantine is fundamental in containing the disease. Anyway, it is not yet confirmed that [the nursing aide] actually died of SARS, and it is only a few days before the quarantine period expires."

Agbayani appealed to reporters to "stick to the truth and not sensationalize [stories] so as not to cause more pain to the affected people," and to observe quarantine procedures to avoid infection or become carriers.

Regional DOH director Eduardo Janairo admitted that it was difficult to contain SARS. He said people naturally wanted to go to such places as markets and their workplaces.

The INQUIRER learned that some Vacante residents had defied the quarantine by passing through farms to get to neighboring towns.

Agbayani, who chairs the regional development council in the Ilocos, asked the regional police to send additional teams to uphold the quarantine and maintain calm in the barangay.

He asked the other governors in the region covering Pangasinan, La Union, Ilocos Sur and Ilocos Norte to allocate funds for possible SARS cases in their provinces.

The DOH plans to build SARS isolation rooms in Barangay Bonuan Binloc in Dagupan City, where an old hospital building is located, and in the Mangataram District Hospital, which the Pangasinan government maintains.

Agbayani, however, asked the DOH to first consult with the local governments. He pointed out that the residents might not approve of such a plan.

He also asked the DOH to assign two quarantine doctors to the region—one for the Sual port in Pangasinan and another for the Damortis and Poro Point entry in La Union.

He said the DOH should meet with mayors and residents of coastal towns to inform them of the care required in dealing with fishing crews from other countries who might be carrying the SARS virus.

Forcible quarantine

At the House, Negros Occidental Rep. Apolinario Lozada Jr. (Lakas) is proposing a measure that will give the military and the police powers to forcibly quarantine suspected SARS cases.

It will also identify the government facilities where SARS carriers may be held for a certain period.

"Voluntary quarantine is no longer applicable when so many people are dying because of this plague. Possible SARS carriers would have to cooperate with the government to contain the spread of the virus," he said.

Lozada said among the steps that the government could take under the proposed bill was sealing off public or private areas such as hospitals, dwellings, commercial buildings, clinics, resorts, malls, recreation areas and other Adela who helped make possible for her and her husband a tour of Canada a few years ago.

"She sent me all the documents that [we] needed to get a visa for Canada," the cousin said.

By that and other accounts, the family was closely knit.

Adela completed a course in midwifery at a college in Urdaneta City. After graduation she found employment in Spain, and from there proceeded to Ontario in Canada where she worked in a nursing home.

Later, the third of four siblings filed a petition for her parents to stay with her in her adopted country. Both parents worked and sent financial help to the family members they left behind.

The parents came home in February. Adela's father died Tuesday—officially of colon cancer but he was considered a suspected SARS case.

Another cousin, one of Adela's "close contacts" during her short stay in their barangay, said she sent them gifts like bath soap, canned goods, clothes and the usual stuff sent home by Filipinos working abroad.

The 35-year-old cousin said she did not resent being "in isolation" and being regularly checked by medical personnel for SARS symptoms.

"I washed her clothes when she was here," the cousin said.

Another relative said that when Adela arrived on April 5, she already had fever.

"One night she wanted to take a bath, but complained that it was too cold," the relative said.

She took medication and the fever subsided, only to recur. She also complained of back pain.

During her brief stay, the cousin said, Adela visited only two houses—that of her brother, the barangay chair, and that of their parents. "Maybe because she was not feeling very well."

Yet despite her condition, the dutiful daughter was earlier said to have made trips to several provinces in search of a doctor to treat her father.

Now the family is in anguish over the way Adela was treated in death.

"We were not allowed even to bring her coffin inside the house," a cousin lamented. "The [Department of Health] people wanted us to take her body directly to the cemetery. But we pitied her because it was almost dawn when her body arrived in the village."

The cousin called a priest, who reportedly told the mourners to take the body to the church for the final sacrament.

"But we were prevented from bringing her to the church, so we just requested the priest to go to the cemetery," the cousin said.

enclosed public places.

"The government can even isolate the whole barangay where suspected SARS carriers are living," he said, adding:

"This law is far more urgent than the anti-terrorism bill because the SARS virus can kill any-

BMW Philippines

Sheer Driving Pleasure

The letter M in BMW stands for "Motoren", and advanced engine technologies have always been the basis for the success of "Bayerische Motoren Werke". An impressive list of innovations and heavy investment in research and development has brought about BMW's leadership position in automotive technologies. To mention just the most recent examples: VALVETRONIC in the new BMW 7 Series 8- and 12-cylinder gasoline engines, the first V8 diesel engines with Common Rail Technology, and the world's first "clean energy" fleet of automobiles that converts oxygen and hydrogen into water to power the most advanced BMW limousines. While commercial availability of hydrogen is still a thing of the future, you can nevertheless be sure that with BMW's advanced gasoline and diesel units you are still getting the very best that technology has to offer today. Without BMW, modern automotive technology would not have developed as it has.

suit and to protect the rights of the parties under the court's direction.

Once under receivership, Meralco should be rehabilitated by auctioning off some of its franchise holdings that were due to expire this year, the National Association of Electricity Consumers for Reforms (Nasecore) said yesterday.

Nasecore president Pete Ilagan said the government should also assert its right as the biggest shareholder in Meralco and take over the management of the firm.

"If the present (Meralco management) continues to bandy the bankruptcy line, the government should take the cue and assert its interest," Ilagan said.

Meralco has warned that it will go bankrupt if it refunds consumers the excess charges, estimated at more than P28 billion, that it collected starting 1994.

The Supreme Court has ordered Meralco to refund its customers the excess charges, which stemmed from the utility firm's decision to treat income taxes and assets not related to the business of distributing electricity as operating expenses.

Meralco filed another motion for reconsideration on April 15 after the Supreme Court's third division "denied with finality" on April 9 the power firm's motion for reconsideration to reverse the court's Nov. 15, 2002 refund order.

Second motion

The government top lawyer said Meralco could still file another motion seeking to reverse the high court's refund order.

Solicitor General Alfredo Benipayo said there was nothing in the rules of court that barred Meralco from filing a second motion for reconsideration.

Benipayo, a former appellate court justice and Supreme Court administrator, said accepting the second motion was the discretion of the 15-member tribunal.

His stand was contrary to the pronouncement of Supreme Court spokesperson Ismael Khan who said Tuesday that the country's largest power distributor had no other option but to immediately abide by the refund order.

Khan said that the decision was final and executory, so Meralco could no longer file another motion for reconsideration.

He said the second motion would not be given "due course" by the high court.

Benipayo believed the prohibition on the filing of a second motion for reconsideration covered the appellate and trial courts but not the Supreme Court.

He, however, clarified that he was not siding with Meralco. He said that though he believed Meralco could still file another motion, it was unlikely that the Supreme Court would change its mind.

"Whatever arguments (Meralco presented in its latest motion), they were never sustained by the Supreme Court. And the decision is final. Eventually, (it will) have to refund," Benipayo said.

On Tuesday, President Macapagal-Arroyo said Meralco must comply with the court order but hinted her administration may be open to a settlement. She said Meralco "must find a way to meet its obligations to the public in line with the judicious use of its own means and resources."

Kid gloves

The umbrella group Anakpawis condemned Ms Macapagal for treating Meralco with kid gloves despite its being guilty of "national plunder and corporate exploitation."

"The President really loves the Lopez group (which controls Meralco). It is an open book to millions of Meralco consumers that the Lopez clan is one of the administration's most favored clients," Anakpawis vice chair Carmen Denuida said in a statement.

Joel Maglunsod, Kilusang Mayo Uno secretary general, said the steady expansion of the Lopez group of companies could have been an outcome of Meralco's overcharging. The Lopez group is also into telecommunications, broadcasting, water distribution and property development.

"No one in his right mind would believe that a profit-greedy company like Meralco would suffer losses if it gave back to customers what it had plundered," Maglunsod said.

A consumer group demanded that Meralco stop collecting the overcharge of 16.7 centavos per kWh.

"This should be a good start for Meralco to make amends for its crime," Alerto Mamimili spokesperson Lolita Donato said. "We need all the money we can save from our budget, especially now that the enrollment period is nearing."

GMA: Probe Mindoro murders

while they were on a fact-finding mission looking into allegations of military abuses in Oriental Mindoro, their colleagues said.

The two were found dead the following morning in Barangay Aladesma in Bansud town some 200 meters from the highway. The three others were found hogtied in Bongabong town.

Vigilantism

Ms Macapagal told the barangay watchers that vigilantism was a form of terrorism that they should also guard against.

But the victims' fellow activists are convinced that Marcellana and Gumanoy had been murdered, not by vigilantes, but by the military supposedly upon the orders of Col. Jovito Palparan, head of the Army's 204th Infantry Brigade.

They said the killings were meant to thwart investigation of allegations that troops had abused villagers and farmers in Mindoro. The military has denied committing such abuses and being behind the murders.

An official of Bayan Muna expressed reservations on the President's order to create a task force to look into the murders in Mindoro.

"The investigation must lead to the prosecution and punishment of Palparan and not to a political gimmick that would facilitate a cover-up," Robert de Castro, Bayan Muna deputy secretary general, said.

De Castro said the task force should investigate not only the abduction and killing of Marcellana and Gumanoy, but also the whole cases of involuntary disappearance and the series of murders of members of legitimate organizations in the province.

He challenged the President to prove her sincerity by immediately relieving Palparan while the cases were being investigated.

"Only by relieving the army official can witnesses and victims—including town mayors and local government officials—speak out in the open without fear of reprisal," he said.

De Castro said Marcellana, secretary general of Karapatan-Southern Tagalog, was scheduled to testify against Palparan at the Commission of Appointments to oppose Palparan's promotion to brigadier general.

"The brutal killing of Marcellana and Gumanoy came after Malacañang submitted Palparan's promotion to the CA. Palparan thinks he is beyond any reckoning of the law," De Castro said in a statement.

Promotion blocked

Bayan Muna, according to the statement, has filed a formal opposition before the CA in the hope of blocking Palparan's promotion.

Asked to comment, Palparan said he did not know that Bayan Muna was out to block his promotion. "As far as the human right abuses against my unit (were concerned), they have always made these allegations but they have not been able to present any proof," Palparan told defense reporters.

A group of environmentalists is offering another angle to the abduction and murder of human rights activists.

The Southern Tagalog Environmental Action Movement (Steam) said the proposed mining activities in Mindoro may have something to do with the murder abductions and killings on the island.

Dr. Jun Saturay, chair of Steam, said Marcellana and Gumanoy were prominent opponents of planned mining operations in Mindoro. Saturay said some multinational companies like the Canadian firm Crew Minerals Inc.—formerly MINDEX Inc.—had expressed interest in putting up mining facilities in the province.

Almost 20 percent of the province is being eyed as mining areas, according to Saturay.

He noted that many opponents of "bogus development projects" in Southern Tagalog were either harassed, kidnapped or killed by military and paramilitary units. He cited the killings of Edwin Bacarra, Emil Santillan, Oscar Sacdalan and couple Manuela and Expedito Albarillo, who were known anti-mining activists in Mindoro.

Revolutionary justice

Militant farmers demanded revolutionary justice for Gumanoy and Marcellana.

"Palparan and his criminal gang must be sentenced by the people's court due to his monstrous crimes against the peasantry and the people," said Danilo Ramos, secretary general of the Kilusang Magbubukid ng Pilipinas.

The people's court is the tribunal of the communist New People's Army (NPA).

Palparan denied the allegations that he had ordered the abduction and killing of the two leaders.

A KMP statement described Gumanoy, 38, as "a small coconut farmer" from Gen. Nakar town in Quezon Province. He was elected chair of Kasama-TK during its 5th Congress in November last year.

The remains of Gumanoy and Marcellana were to arrive yesterday afternoon at the Port of Sta. Clara in Batangas. A tribute and vigil were scheduled in Batangas City.

This morning, their remains will be brought to Manila by a funeral-caravan of Southern Tagalog farmers and will be welcomed by farmers from Central Luzon led by the KMP Alyansang Magbubukid ng Gimaang Luzon and other activists in Metro Manila. With reports from Martin P. Marfil and Gerald G. Lacuarta in Manila; and Marlon Ramos and Delfin T. Mallari Jr., PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

I am on the afternoon shift but my boss, Ernie Sarmiento, said that I proceed immediately to the North Expressway in Bocaue, Bulacan. He had arranged for the INQUIRER driver to rendezvous with me in Bocaue as I live in the adjacent town of San Jose del Monte, Bulacan. He said I had to transmit my photo before 5 p.m. of the same day.

Upon reaching Bayambang, a town away from Alcala, I called up our correspondent, Yolanda Fuentes, to ask for directions. She told me she had already left Alcala as people were getting angry at her and other members of the media who suddenly descended on their barrio.

I proceeded to Barangay Vacante where I saw residents in a waiting shed; some were wearing masks others not. I took some pictures, then went to the Barangay Health Center. There were no personnel around. I saw a woman and asked where the Health personnel were. She sarcastically answered "Nagto-tong-it sila," she said. (They're playing cards.) I later learned that they were mad at the personnel of the Department of Health for isolating three zones in their village.

Agitated

I asked a woman how I could get to the residence of Adele Catalan. That was when she became agitated and she replied "Paano nyong nasiguro na SARS nga ang pumatay sa kanya?" (How are you sure that SARS killed her?). She then whispered something to the man behind her while looking at me sharply. I sensed trouble so I asked Romy Tamayo, our driver to back off and just return to the waiting shed.

I noticed that not all were wearing masks, and a woman said that the masks were from the health center but there was not enough for everyone. She related to me their situation, "They don't allow us out of the barrio," she said referring to the health personnel. "They just bring food to us." After taking more pictures, I decided it was time to transmit my photos to our Makati office.

Shunned

I went back to Bayambang to look for a telephone calling station. There was no available line, so I proceeded to Camiling, Tarlac. I entered an establishment with a sign "International Calling Station" outside. I asked the lady owner to allow me to use a direct line as my laptop was programmed to connect to our company modem through a direct line.

As I was preparing my laptop, about 10 personnel of the calling station were curious about the gadget I just brought in. They milled around me to look at the pictures. But as soon as I opened the first pictures that I took—those of the residents of Barangay Vacante wearing masks, they immediately backed off. "You came from Alcala, why didn't you say so right away?" the irked owner told me in Filipino.

Addressing her personnel, she said to them, "Don't go near him. You might get infected." They all scattered away from me.

Go away

They were so alarmed that the owner asked me to leave immediately. "Go away. You might contaminate our things here. Clean up the things you touched here," she said in Filipino.

After a while a burly man approached me and ordered me to leave immediately and look for another calling station. Thinking of my boss' order for me to beat the deadline, I sought the assistance of a police officer to help me find an establishment where I could transmit the Alcala pictures. Fortunately, we found one. But I made sure not to let anyone in that place see the pictures I was sending back to the office.

CEASE-AND-DESIST ORDER

Pyramid 'queen' suffers yet another legal blow

By Michael Lim Ubac

PYRAMID scam "queen" Rosario Baladajay was dealt yet another legal blow, this time by the Court of Appeals, which junked her petition seeking to nullify adverse orders issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

In a 12-page decision promulgated this week, the appellate court's 11th division ruled that the SEC did not, as the petition claimed, commit grave abuse of discretion when it issued two cease-and-desist orders stopping Baladajay's Multinational Telecom Investors Corp. (Multitel) from further collecting investments from the public.

The CA ruling came in the heels of a Supreme Court order extending the freeze orders on all bank accounts and financial assets of Multitel and other pseudo-investment firms involved in similar scams. The freeze orders cover some P1.08 billion in bank accounts and assets belonging to Multitel, Japanese businessman Genta Ogami, and the Abu Sayyaf Group, among others.

Baladajay, president of Multitel, is currently detained at the Makati City Jail for a host of estafa and syndicated swindling charges filed in connection with a P10 billion pyramid scam. Other criminal cases against her are pending with the justice department and regional trial courts in Pasig City and Pangasinan.

The CA decision dated March 31 was written by Associate Justice Bienvenido Reyes and concurred in by Associate Justices Salvador Valdez Jr. and Danilo Pine.

In the ruling, the CA explained that Baladajay's petition had failed when tested against "stringent requisites," namely: "Abuse of discretion must be so grave, as when the power is exercised in an arbitrary or despotic manner by reason of passion or personal hostility; and it must be so patent as to amount to an evasion of positive duty or to a virtual refusal to perform the duty enjoined."

The petition stemmed from a cease-and-desist order (CDO) issued by the SEC on Aug. 4, 2000 on Multitel, after an audit revealed that the firm had 238 investors with an aggregate exposure of P11.7 million.

But on June 19, 2001, after Multitel paid up fines imposed by the commission, the SEC en banc lifted the CDO.

The SEC's Inspection and Surveillance Division then examined Multitel's book of accounts and financial records, as well as the books and records of three of its investors—the Everflow Group of Companies Inc., Partners in Progress Holdings Inc. and Sage Management Corp. Besides these three firms, Multitel has nine other listed investors.

It was discovered that all 12 investors accepted investments from, and for the account of, individual clients to whom they issued receipts as evidence of indebtedness. They remitted the collections to Multitel, which then issued postdated checks directly to the individual investors.

However, SEC also discovered that Multitel and its partners engaged in deposit-taking "without license from the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas, and despite (the) absence of such purpose under their respective Articles of Incorporation."

Thus, on Jan. 15, 2002, the SEC issued a second CDO, which was declared permanent 10 days later. This meant that Multitel and its partner firms were forever barred from further accepting investments from the public.

A reconsideration sought by Multitel was denied by the SEC on March 5, 2002. Aggrieved, Multitel elevated the matter to the CA.

With its decision a full year later, the CA sided with the SEC which, it said, was empowered to issue the CDO to "protect the investing public." It also stressed that the main issue was not the CDO, but the violations committed by Multitel in its operations.

GOZUN: Debt for nature swap

Germany condones P82M in debt deal

GERMANY has cancelled about P82.5 million of the Philippines' P371 million debt after a debt-for-nature swap proved successful in a Quirino province conservation project.

In a communique to the Philippine government, Germany's Financial Cooperation Agency (Kreditanstalt für Wiederaufbau or KfW) formally cancelled DM 3,832,512 of the country's debt, including interest accrued, after it learned of the success of the RP-German Community Forestry Project-Quirino (CFPQ).

The project implemented between July 1999 and March 2003 in 10 barangays in the towns of Madela, Nagtipunan, Aglipay and Diffun included reforestation and conservation programs and the sustainable use of natural resources with emphasis on bio-diversity by the local communities.

The four-year project resulted in the planting of gmelina, mahogany and narra seedlings on 1,487.66 hectares of land; the establishment of 982 hectares of agro-forestry farms with fruit-bearing trees, and the construction of 10 multi-purpose buildings, 22 kilometers of farm-to-market roads, 26.55 km of access roads and five dams or small water impounding systems.

The debt cancellation was a result of two agreements signed with Germany in 1992 and 1996. The agreements called for the writing-off of the debt through the utilization of 30 percent of the debt to fund the Quirino project.

With the program's success, Environment Secretary Elisea Gozun said: "We will try to look into similar debt swap schemes with other countries to reduce our debt, as well as ensure sustainable management of the environment." Gerald G. Lacuarta

Sick economies

DEATHS from SARS continue to rise. Even as the war in Iraq wound down, the SARS epidemic has grabbed the headlines and compounded economic uncertainty in the international markets.

In China, the epicenter of the epidemic, SARS has already killed 95 people (a number that is probably understated) and infected 2,158. It has killed

EDITORIAL 235 people and infected 4,100 in at least 30 countries. Two probable deaths from SARS have been reported in the Philippines, and an equal number in Malaysia. The toll in Hong Kong, Singapore and Thailand is rising. Although most of the victims have been in Asia, SARS is more than an Asian flu; Canada, in North America, has a number of victims.

Despite the frantic search for a cure to this killer-disease, no vaccine has been found to check it, and it is likely that the epidemic will spread and claim more lives in more countries before a way is found to stop it. Devices for detection of infection have been put in place in many countries where infection is suspected, but that's a distance away from a cure. The virus has not even been positively identified.

Medical authorities say that the disease does not spread very quickly and is not even highly contagious. Most experts say that SARS is highly unlikely to escalate into a pandemic like the Spanish flu, which killed 25 million worldwide between 1918 and 1920.

One hopes they are right, but in the meantime the SARS epidemic has already inflicted a heavy economic toll since it was first detected last November. Its economic impact on growth is approaching that of the Asian financial crisis of 1997.

Travel, tourism, retailing as well as the food and entertainment industries have been badly hit. Cathay Pacific has slashed its flights by 50 percent, and airlines flying into and out of Asia have counted many empty seats. Hong Kong, the shopping center of Asia, presents a macabre picture of deserted shops and restaurants. People in Singapore, Hong Kong and even Manila have taken to wearing clinical masks. This prompted one Hong Kong observer to say, "How can you enjoy a meal when the waiters are tiptoeing around in mask? It's like going to a morgue. If this continues for very long, we're going to see mass bankruptcies."

Economists have begun slashing growth estimates for Asian economies hardest hit by SARS. Morgan Stanley has revised its gross domestic forecasts for 2003 in Asia based on expectations that SARS will cut into retail and reduce tourism. It cut GDP forecast for East Asia, excluding Japan, to 4.5 percent, from 5.1 percent; China, from 7 percent to 6.5 percent; Hong Kong, from 2.7 percent to 2.1 percent; and Taiwan, from 2.8 percent to 2.3 percent. Economists say that Hong Kong, Singapore and Taiwan could easily go into recession, adding that "this could be the worst thing since the Asian financial crisis."

Afflicted countries have to make do with the obvious countermeasures: tightening of quarantine measures at airports and centers suspected as infected areas. With more citizens wearing masks, and if the infection does not run its course soon, we could be seeing a grotesque landscape where more people are wearing masks than soldiers wearing anti-chemical and germ gear in the invasion of Iraq.

The fact that China has underreported the severity of the epidemic is only part of the problem. Governments tend to underplay the health menace in order not to panic their populations, but of all the responses to this health crisis, concealing it is the worst approach.

The most important and critical effort now is to find an effective way to combat the disease and check its spread. Quarantine measures are important, and this inconvenience is something that we have to bear until an antidote is found. Such precautions will probably help minimize the spread of infection. But our best hope lies in the frenzied search for a cure in many of the world's medical laboratories.

Pressure on Israel

IF the peace process is to get started in the Middle East, the international pressure on Israel must become much stronger. Britain and the European Union have tried to put the issue on the agenda. But the key to success is to be found in Washington.

FOREIGN COMMENT

The Americans could force Israel to make concessions. But if so, US President George W. Bush must realize that the Israeli occupation is a decisive engine behind both political instability and terrorism.

The resurrection of the Balara Filters

AS I SEE IT

Neal H. Cruz

SUMMER means going on picnics, outings and excursions to faraway places. The last is the most popular for people both in urban and rural areas. It consists of each individual paying a fee to join the excursion, hiring buses, and members of a class or school or community piling into buses with their baon and then motorizing to Enchanted Kingdom in Sta. Rosa, Laguna, the Philippine equivalent of Disneyland, to Baguio or to some beach resort.

In the 1950s and 1960s, an excursion was invariably a trip to Hinulugang Taktak in Antipolo, Tagaytay, Matabangtay in Batangas—or to the Balara Filters in Quezon City. Even people in Manila, or any of its suburbs, hired buses for an excursion to Balara. As students, when there were no classes or we just wanted to play hooky, my barkada used to go to Balara to swim. It was as popular as diving from the rocks of the breakwater of Luneta into Manila Bay, which was still clean at that time.

People liked Balara because they were sure its waters were clean, being the filtration plant of the water supply to Manila. Its main attraction were the swimming pools: a big one for adults with diving boards on different levels, and a small one for children. Beside them were pavilions, which excursionists rented exclusively for their members, there to dance to recorded music.

There were wooded areas and other attractions around the swimming pools and pavilions (Balara is 60 hectares in all). From the swimming pools, you walked to the picnic areas through a road overlooking the aeration lagoon where plumes of water spouted from huge pipes to be aerated. In the bright sunlight, the umbrella-like fountains turned into miniature rainbows.

In the picnic area, there were picnic tables and benches where you could eat your baon. Among them were two tall water towers.

There were many other attractions: a chapel, miniature castles, topiaries of Don Quixote, Sancho Panza and their horses, an amphitheater, a miniature Jerusalem, etc. but most of the excursionists congregated in and around the swimming pools and pavilions.

For some reason, the National Waterworks and Sewerage Authority quietly closed the pools, pavilions and other attractions to excursionists. It has never been fully explained why. Was it because it was losing money on the operation although it must have been collecting plenty from the entrance fees? And so for many years, excursionists were deprived of one favorite destination, while residents of the park-deficient Metro Manila lost a place to cool off during summer.

Happily, Manila Water, the private concessionaire for half of Metro Manila, is resurrecting Balara Filters for the enjoyment of the public. In fact, it is inaugurating the rehabilitated Balara Filters tomorrow, which is very timely as it is just a few days after Easter. It would have been even better had it been opened to the public during Holy Week to provide the people who wisely didn't go to faraway resorts and stayed home in Metro Manila, an alternative destination in the metropolis.

After tomorrow, Balara will again be an excursion destination. I understand that the vast La Mesa Dam watershed will be rehabilitated next. Bless Manila Watershed for that. The teeming metropolis is acutely short of parks.

Here's an update on the traffic situation at the corner of Commonwealth Avenue and Tandang Sora in Quezon City.

Drivers and commuters there are the most unruly in the world and the policemen with headquarters in the nearby air-conditioned Police Community Precinct, under the flyover, are either blind as bats or are among the laziest in the world. Even when drivers and commuters are violating the laws with impunity, even with huge signs saying that loading and unloading are prohibited at the corner and pointing to the proper waiting area where the government built waiting sheds for the commuters, not one of the policemen in the precinct bothers to arrest the violating drivers or tells the commuters where to wait for their rides.

Well, after I wrote that column, they put steel railings and roped off the two outer lanes to guide the drivers and commuters toward the waiting shed. But the railings stopped 75 steps (I counted them) short of the waiting shed. So the commuters still wait for their ride in the middle of the street, beyond the railings, and jeepneys and buses stop for them there, and continue to block traffic up to the corner.

I saw one barangay tanod vainly trying to wave the jeepneys forward but the jeepney drivers were blind and they didn't see him. They had eyes only for the potential passengers. And no policemen from the community precinct bothered to help him. The President should really make a surprise visit to this precinct.

Is it too difficult to assign at least two policemen, one on each side of Commonwealth, to arrest erring drivers, direct commuters to where they can wait for their ride and arrest jaywalkers? They will not learn to obey the law if they are not arrested for violating it.

I understand that a deputy of MMDA Chair Bayani Fernando is in charge of the traffic on Commonwealth. If this is the situation in a street he personally supervises, I wonder how the situation is in other streets.

And what is that community police precinct for?

THERE'S THE RUB

Conrado de Quiros

Global Crossing, a telecommunications giant, while serving as head of the Defense Intelligence Board, might have said the same thing: "Our factories would make (and sell) more arms, our oil companies may own more wells."

The hawks of the time justified the war against Spain before the world also as freeing an enslaved people. They did not bother to suggest that Spain posed a threat to US security, possessing as it did a fleet of tugboats capable of mass destruction. It would have been laughable. Bush and Donald Rumsfeld had more gall there, not particularly minding the incredulity of the world, an incredulity later proved beyond a shadow of doubt. Then, President William McKinley was lauded by his supporters as having bested even Lincoln in the emancipation department: Lincoln had only freed 4 million human beings while McKinley had "lifted 10 million into light and freedom!" In McKinley's sorties to rally support for his war, huge portraits of Washington, Lincoln and him hung above the loudspeakers with the word, "Liberators!"

Aware that the United States wanted war with it, Spain held negotiations with Washington and made all sorts of concessions to appease it. At one point, it agreed to allow the United States to feed Cubans who were suffering from the effects of reconcentration. The hawks became alarmed that this might dampen public enthusiasm for the war and make McKinley a little more reluctant to prosecute it. They held a meeting at the end of which they resolved to warn the president not to "back down."

The theme of not backing down before Saddam Hussein's apparent uncooperativeness and demagoguery is everywhere in the utterances of Colin Powell, Donald Rumsfeld, Tony Blair and George Bush before they went to war.

There was the yellow press in McKinley's time in lieu of embedded journalists. Randolph Hearst was the prime exponent of it, the fellow who, when the photographer he sent to Cuba sent a cable saying nothing much was happening there, cabled back to say: "You supply the pictures, I'll supply the war." The yellow press was as instrumental as the troops in getting a nation steeped in a libertarian tradition to choose empire over republic.

There were exceptions, in the form of the non-embedded journalists of the time. The Philadelphia Ledger carried this dispatch from its correspondent in Manila:

"The present war is no bloodless, fake, opera bouffé engagement; our men have been relentless, have killed to exterminate men, women, children, prisoners and captives, active insurgents and suspected people from lads of 10 up, an idea prevailing that the Filipino as such was little better than a dog...Our soldiers have pumped salt water into men to 'make them talk' and have taken prisoners, people who held up their hands and peacefully surrendered, and an hour later, without an atom of evidence to show that they were even insurgents, stood them on the bridge and shot them down one by one..."

From the Iraqi side, it was much the same as the Filipinos of yesterday. It did not greatly matter that their children were killed by an unseen enemy rather than a seen one. They were just as dead.

Today, the theme is building democracy in a country that never asked for it. What arose in the Philippines then was the Commonwealth, a restricted form of self-rule which came only close to four decades after the United States seized these islands. It is a testament to how free this country has become that many of its citizens long to go back to it, or turn this country into another state of America.

Senators shouldn't miss out on history

REPORTS said Sen. Edgardo Angara and Rep. Eduardo Nachura, who head the committee on constitutional amendments and electoral reforms in their respective chambers, have agreed to meet this week to discuss ways of resolving the congressional deadlock over Charter change. This move is said to be supported by Senators Ramon Magsaysay Jr., Aquilino Pimentel Jr. and Robert Barbers. Despite the current deadlock, however, one can feel that the Charter change campaign is definitely moving. All this is part of our political history. Thus, if the senators don't want to miss out, they have to get into the act. For instance, in the pipeline is a move among various sectors supporting Charter change to draw up a social contract that will set the parameters for the three amendments to the Constitution. By doing so, they aim to avoid any hint of self-interest among the members of the constituent assembly.

But even as leaders of Congress look for ways to agree on Charter change, the presidential aspirants seem to be campaigning early. Raul Roco is all over the country delivering commencement speeches. Despite his disavowal of ambition, streamers proclaiming a "Danding Cojuangco for President Movement" have sprouted in Tarlac and Pangasinan. Loren Legarda, buoyed up by her topping the senatorial survey, says her eyes are definitely on either of the two top posts, while Juan Flavio has posted, true to form, tiny posters to remind people that he could be a choice too. Panfilo Lacson is now preparing for his second TV ad.

Cebu Rep. Nerissa Soon-Ruiz has called on President Macapagal-Arroyo not to attend the April 29 summit of Asean heads of state in Bangkok to map out various strategies to combat SARS. Soon-Ruiz argues that GMA would be placing herself in direct danger of contracting SARS by traveling there.

I agree that the President's prime obligation is to conserve her health for the heavy duties of state, beginning with dealing with the SARS threat. In fact I consider that political summit of

POLITICAL TIDBITS

Belinda Olivares-Cunanan

Asean heads of state on SARS reckless, particularly since there is nothing that their health ministers cannot accomplish with their support. In fact, the Asean ministers will already be meeting days earlier in Kuala Lumpur, so why that summit?

But then, perhaps the President feels that the urgency of this scourge calls for nothing less than a meeting with her counterparts for better coordination. We can only wish her a SARS-safe trip.

Earlier I wrote about the move of the camp of Sen. Panfilo Lacson to recruit to his defense panel a very good friend of Supreme Court Justice Romeo Callejo, the ponente of the April 1 decision ordering the QC regional trial court to reopen the Kuratong Baleleng case. The idea apparently is to disqualify or recuse Callejo in the coming SC voting on Lacson's motion for reconsideration, another trick of the trade in the legal profession. The new counsel of Lacson is Felix Carao Jr. of the Saguisag & Carao law firm. Carao, who signed Lacson's motion for reconsideration, is not only a very good friend of Callejo's, but also his classmate at the San Beda College of Law as well as his compadre (Callejo is the niño of Carao's child in baptism). Interestingly, while the justices were in Baguio before the Holy Week, another law classmate, a close friend of Carao's, attempted to see the justice but the latter refused to receive him.

The ploy to disqualify Callejo may not work as there is a standing SC policy which provides that after a decision has been issued, its ponente can no longer be recused or allowed to recuse himself. This was evident in the recent SC decision on the Meralco case ordering the utility firm to reimburse consumers for its over-billings, when the Court en banc did not allow ponente Justice Reynato Puno to recuse himself after his cousin, Justice Ricardo C. Puno, filed and signed Meralco's motion for reconsideration. Previously Reynato Puno would have invariably recused himself in cases where the law firm of Ricardo Puno served as counsel for one party, but because of this new SC policy this is no longer necessary.

Judging from the way people are getting involved, the revival of the Kuratong Baleleng case promises to be a truly celebrated case. Bantay Katarungan, a militant citizens' group monitoring justice and human rights issues founded by Jovito Salonga and Sedfrey Ordoñez, and composed of law students from four leading law schools, has promised to monitor the trial closely. Another newly formed group, composed of Ateneo law students, will also conduct a KB watch. Quezon City Judge Ma. Theresa Yadao knows that her decisions in the KB case will be closely watched.

Like everybody else, I have been following keenly the accusations of corruption and influence-peddling leveled by former presidential adviser Dante Ang against the Villaraza Angangco law office. It is interesting that Presidential Spokesman Ignacio Bunye has been the one emphasizing the Palace's cordial relations with Ang, obviously in an attempt to contain this PR crisis, while nothing has been heard from the law office. The accusations have been leveled at its top guns and not at the First Couple.

The UP High School class of 1948 will hold its 55th anniversary reunion on Saturday, April 26, starting 9 a.m. at the UP Executive House in Diliman, Quezon City. Among the prominent members of this class are conductor and violinist Oscar Yato, Urban Planning Prof. Lita Velmonte, Prof. Raul Ingles and Cary Bernardo Reyes, a well-known lecturer on family values. For details contact Ms Reyes at 725-6440.

Hope from an ancient plague

YOU all remember the game "Ring a ring of roses," in which children either stand or sit in a circle while chanting the rhyme

Ring a ring of roses
A pocketful of posies
A-tishoo! a-tishoo!
We all fall down.

When they say the final line, all the children then fall back together.

Scholars say the game and the rhyme is actually a remnant of one of the most devastating periods in the history of Europe and maybe even of humanity. In the 1300s, a deadly disease spread through China (believed to have originated in the Gobi Desert), then reached Europe about a decade later through infected sailors aboard trading ships. Known as the Bubonic Plague, for the appearance of lumps which grew to the size of an egg or apple in the neck or groin, also called "buboes," the disease was more commonly called the "Black Death," because blood hemorrhaging internally eventually turned black and caused the victim's body to darken just before death.

The rhyme evokes the horrors of the disease, beginning with the rash around the neck, known as "roseola," that signals infection. The "pocketful of posies" refers to the practice of placing fragrant blossoms on the clothes of the afflicted because as the disease progresses, victims begin exuding a "horrible body stench." And "a-tishoo, a-tishoo"? This refers to one of the most common ways the disease was spread, with anybody coming in contact with the victim almost certainly falling ill as well and dying, which "all fall down" connotes.

Macabre, maybe, but language experts say rhymes about tragedies, especially on the scale of the "Black Death," is one way by which young minds seek to grasp events too terrible to imagine.

FIVE years after first arriving on European shores, the Bubonic Plague had left 25 million dead, about one-third of Europe's population at the time. The disease would seem to disappear in winter, only to come back in the spring. And though the worst of the pestilence tapered off at the end of the 14th century, it did not entirely disappear until the 1600s.

AT LARGE

The Black Death's depredations on the individual were so swift that Boccaccio, writing in the "Decameron," was moved to comment that victims "ate lunch with their friends and had dinner with their ancestors in paradise." It spread viciously and with such inexorable speed, afflicting entire families and communities, rich and poor alike. At the height of the epidemic, 500 people were dying each day in Pisa and Vienna; in Paris, there were 800 deaths a day, with the disease soon wiping out half of the city's population of 100,000. Some 100,000 people died of the plague in Florence in just four months, and in many European cities and towns, the disease killed as many as 80-90 percent of the population.

Structures of society were upended by the disease. Families turned away or abandoned relatives suspected of harboring the disease, doctors refused to open their doors to patients, and even priests refused to give the last sacrament.

The Bubonic Plague not only wiped out a third of Europe's population (and an unknown number in China, the Middle East and the rest of Asia), it also had far-reaching consequences on the world economy, the social order and even religion.

Initially, it led to widespread panic and persecution. Jews and lepers came under suspicion and ultimately banishment and slaughter, suspected of somehow introducing or spreading the disease. An order of fanatics, known as the Flagellants, believing the plague was God's punishment on an ungrateful populace, organized processions led by a group of their robed leaders, lashing themselves with whips. The processions, participated in by as many as 2,000 at a time, only helped spread the disease even farther. As the plague persisted for decades, people began to question their faith in God's benevolence, leading to the Reformation.

After the worst of the plague, Europe was so underpopulated that serious labor shortages ensued, forcing a transformation of the agriculture-based economy into production modes that demanded less brute power. It's believed the Renaissance, with its emphasis on human achievement and learning, could not have been possible without the radical rethinking occasioned by the Black Death.

SCIENTISTS have since determined that the plague was caused by bacteria that infested rats and were transmitted to humans by fleas that fed on the rats and then bit humans. The disease retreated in winter only because the fleas were dormant in cold weather.

The epidemic was brought to a halt with strict quarantines and the enforcement of more hygienic practices, that, unknown to public health authorities, indirectly led to reduced rat infestations and the disappearance of the disease.

One episode of "Secrets of the Dead" on PBS tells the strange story of an English town called Eyam. The plague came to the town in 1665 after a tailor received a bolt of cloth from London that was infested with fleas. In a month, five residents had already died and as a consequence all of Eyam was placed under quarantine. When authorities visited the town some months later, they expected to find a ghost town but discovered instead the majority of residents hale and hearty. Were the inhabitants of Eyam immune from the plague?

It turns out that they were. A subsequent study by geneticists on direct descendants of the plague survivors of Eyam uncovered the existence of a resistant gene that may hold the key to survival of those living with currently "incurable" viral diseases like HIV/AIDS and even the much-dreaded SARS.

Like hazardous wastes, Von said, dirty technologies tend to follow the path of least resistance. He cautioned that with some PR, the incinerator industry could repackaging obsolete incinerators as modern, non-polluting technologies.

Prior to the ban, there were incinerators in the Philippines, mostly small, old units in hospitals. Then proposals to build town incinerators came. At least 10 were documented in 1998. These were for places that were economically and politically powerless to resist them.

But where are we? Waste management plans seem dead in their tracks while garbage is generated day after day after day. Go to a mall and think of all its contents becoming garbage in no time. Where should all these go?

Von would rather put the bulk of the investment in "educating and organizing communities around the front-end strategies of waste segregation, composting and recycling, rather than relying on quick fixes and expensive technologies."

The "front-end" approach stresses individual and collective responsibility for the waste in one's own locality, instead of the "out of sight, out of mind" mind-set in the traditional collection system. The front-end approach is superior, Von said, pointing out the greater economic benefits for communities (more jobs), instead of money drained for the multinationals.

Resources are recycled and brought back into the economy. Composting of organic wastes is a must. The potential value of this smelly stuff for agriculture is tremendous.

Sweeping changes will not come overnight but if environment-friendly strategies are implemented now, if the Philippines starts moving away from landfills and dumpsites now, a cleaner environment is not too far away.

It's hard to believe but it can be done. I am a believer and practitioner of "zero waste." I have a compost pit that gives me fertilizer. I now know where to sell my empty ink cartridges. Now, who would like to take back my toxic batteries?

Girl on a pedestal

FROM ONE fight to another, from one kind deed to another, I always found a reason to stay—and to keep on believing. But now after the last few drops of tears have dried, I have finally found my place. Out of his life.

I've always tried to help friends get through their romantic dilemmas by asking them, "Is it worth it?" Now I am haunted by the same question and my very active mind can come up with only two words:

It was. I've come to terms with the fact that this is my stop. This is where I get off. This is when I cut the rope.

I will always have very fond memories of Ryan, and the man he almost was. I can recall the few big fights and the not-so-interesting disputes we had, but I choose to remember with a smile the four years we were close to each other.

There was always a reason to keep the relationship, the friendship that forever was just that, friendship. There was more than one attempt to take it to another level, but always I found myself where I had left off: the girlfriend substitute, the meantime girl. Always almost, but not quite.

Now I find myself running out of reasons. I have come face to face with the reality that he was never the best friend that I was to him all along. It was just a label, a term, I could use to describe what he was to me and what we had for each other. I wanted more. And it took me this long to finally realize that I could not have what I wanted. Not with Ryan. So what's the point of settling for mere friendship?

I always advise my friends, "Know what you want and stick to it." I have always known what I wanted, but unfortunately, he didn't want me the same way.

Once again, I am going through this tug-of-war over what I want and what I deserve, and I know I deserve more. After my true feelings surfaced, I began to acknowledge the fact that I was fixated on his looks. The rest was just part of the illusion I had created in my mind, just like the reasons that were not supposed to be there.

Painful, yes, but still bearable. When you have finally run out of answers and all that's comforting you are mere possibilities, won't you get tired, too? I always ask; I never assume.

If there was any beauty in our relationship, it was that we were conscious about telling the truth, no matter how silly, foolish or painful. All along he was telling me that I was just a friend. Some of his actions seemed to say otherwise, but that, was, of course, to someone who chose to see more. He would tell our friends that I was the ideal, or that if ever he would get into a serious relationship, it would have to be with someone of my caliber or better. So there I was again, the girl on a pedestal, but never in his arms.

Despite all this, I stayed on, hoping that I would in time be able to serve my purpose even as his friend, not necessarily his best friend, just a friend. Why? Because I found fulfillment in making him know the man that he was to me. Because we were both convenient. There were good and bad reasons, but after all that was said and done, it was because I was happy most of all. Then I would wake up one morning, not feeling the same way anymore, less hopeful but more certain that I wanted more.

I have given it enough time—for us to grow, for us to be the better persons that we are now. I would like to think that I gave it enough chance already. I would like to believe that someday when our paths cross again, we will see each other in the arms of people who deserve us best, who are willing to love us more than we did each other, people who are meant to be "chosen" and not someone we had to settle for.

I have given it my best—all I have got, in fact—and I can only give so much. The same with Ryan. If it were right, I wouldn't be trying so hard.

Now I have reached this decision, the decision to say enough. And when you say enough, you have to mean it's over.

It has been a struggle. In my heart, though, I know that I will be okay. I have to be. My best friend, whom I visit during lunch breaks at the nearest church, reminds me that the shortest distance between my struggle and relief is as short as the distance between my knees and the floor.

Funny how when we were all little, we could not wait for the day when we would finally grow up and fall in love—only to realize that it was so much easier to deal with scarred knees than broken hearts. When my "sister" told me this, I realized that I was no longer a little girl. I have scarred my knees more than once and had my heart broken twice. But I am still looking forward to the falling and rising, and everything in between.

LAST week, a Filipino received the Goldman Environmental Prize, often called the Nobel Prize of the environmental movement. The prize included a statuette and a whopping $125,000 for each winner.

Von Hernandez, 36, the winner from Asia, was one of six from different regions of the world. Just as important as the awards are the opportunities and the opening of doors for the winners and the causes they espouse. Von will attend a series of high-level meetings with members of the US Congress, senior World Bank officials and public policy leaders. He will take this chance to ask US officials to face up to their responsibility to victims and to clean up toxic sites in the former US military bases.

I spoke with Von before he left for the United States to receive his prize. Von, by the way, did not know that he had been nominated. I've known him in connection with his work at Greenpeace International. The Goldman Prize, however, is not directly connected with his current employment at Greenpeace as Asia Toxics Campaigner but with his track record in advocacy work against waste incineration that led to the Philippines' becoming the first country in the world to ban incineration nationwide.

The W.A.R. in the title above I borrowed from a treatise Von wrote on Waste and Recycling (W.A.R.).

Von wears several hats of the same color. He is active in the Eco-Waste Coalition and its "Zero Waste" campaign. He is the chair of the People's Task Force for Bases Clean-Up. He is also the co-ordinator of the Global Alliance for Incinerator Alternatives (GAIA). Von's efforts to expose the high cost and the serious health hazards that come with garbage incineration have not fallen on deaf ears. But the battle is far from over.

Incinerator pushers are back despite the passage of the Ecological Solid Waste Management Act and the incineration ban in the Clean Air Act. Leading the pushers, Von said, is Jancom Environmental Corp. which has been promoting its so-called materials recovery facilities and waste-to-energy plan as a lasting solution to garbage woes.

HUMAN FACE

Ma. Ceres P. Doyo

Von's work is a mix of activities ranging from planning and working with communities threatened with toxic pollution, field investigations, local and international coalition building, to lobbying in government agencies, coordinating action such as protests, and media work. He is also a doting husband and father.

Before joining Greenpeace, Von worked as legislative division head in Sen. Orly Mercado's office. His experience in legislation later helped in the campaign for the passage of the Clean Air Act and Solid Waste Management Act.

It has not been easy. Von has been threatened with libel suits, and he has been ridiculed in the media by those who wanted the incineration ban lifted. Some even blamed Von for the garbage crisis.

Where is Asia with respect to the proliferation of incinerators? Von said that counting Japan, Asia would easily be the region with the most number of incinerators. Japan has thousands, which explains why it has the highest dioxin emissions worldwide, a consequence of its mindless burning policy.

Poison is not just in the smoke emissions that go up to the sky. Fire does not destroy everything. Ash residues contain lethal toxins that could ruin the ground and the bodies of water where living things grow.

In the last decade, Von pointed out, there has been large-scale migration of waste incinerators from the North and from Japan into the rest of Asia. There has been increasing public opposition to incinerators in industrialized countries. The incinerator makers are looking for new major markets where environmental regulations

A longer period for exploitation of workers

WE would like to thank Robin Sy, president of the Federation of Filipino-Chinese Chamber of Commerce and Industry Inc. (FFCCCI), for his candor in explaining their proposals on such topics of vital interest as: the 10-year moratorium on labor strikes; expanding contractual work from six months to two years; and hiring workers at an apprentice rate, which is below the minimum wage. While we certainly would not agree to these repulsive ideas, we commend him for his honesty in admitting what we have been saying all along: that employers like him are only concerned about making their workers accept terms that will ensure more profit.

Coming at a time when we are about to celebrate the centennial of International Labor Day in the country, the FFCCCI's proposals are a clear reminder of how much more remains to be done until justice prevails.

We must recall the near-slave conditions of the working people which the labor movement has fought against for more than 100 years: hazardous working conditions; work shifts that could last more than 12 hours; wages that are barely enough to keep the workers alive for a day; no minimum labor standards whatsoever; and no trade union rights! All these were drastically changed because of the labor movement's determined struggle to advance workers' and trade union rights through collective bargaining and, when necessary, to wage concerted actions, including strikes.

Everything that the working people now enjoy was paid for by unionists. In most cases, they did so by putting their jobs on the line, and sometimes their own lives! Thus, while strikes are generally a response to oppressive conditions, workers use them only as their weapon of last recourse. And judging by how much the labor movement has uplifted workers' lives throughout these years, one can easily say that the right to strike, or even the threat of a strike, was instrumental in changing the conditions of the working people.

It is not surprising for us that Sy and his organization would complain against strikes. What is surprising though, is that he and his organization had the temerity to claim that should the government heed their proposals, the country stood to gain three million more jobs in the next two years. It sounded like the promises made by President Macapagal-Arroyo years ago when, as a senator, she was selling the benefits of joining the GATT-WTO. And we all know what happened to her promises. Nothing!

And what kind of jobs are they promising? Contractual labor stretched to two years with workers being paid below minimum wage! In other words, they no longer want to exploit workers for three to six months, as many employers currently do. This time they want to do so for two years.

Unhappy over column on gays

I AM gay, and hard as it has been for me to come out of the closet, I decided that one has to come out to be able to contribute to society's better understanding and tolerance of people like us.

Isagani Cruz's column last April 13 made me realize that indeed homophobia in the Philippines still runs high, even among people who you think are better educated and hence more understanding of homosexuals in a society like ours.

It saddened me to know that despite his erudition, Cruz still believes that gays are out there and act the way they do because they want to have all the attention of those around them. If only he knew how difficult it is for a gay person just to be himself.

What I got from his article was, just like the rest of society, that there is still a great ambivalence when it comes to gay people as well as a double standard: it is okay for one to be gay so long as he still toes the line of the macho image of the Filipino, thus deserving of what Cruz calls "our respect." It seems that dignity is reserved only for those who are manly, while the same should not be accorded to those who "wear feminine attire, paint their faces like women, and walk with mincing steps to look dainty," as he put it.

Cruz's column, I think, did more harm than good to Filipino society.

PINOY KASI

Michael L. Tar

THE MEDIA frenzy around SARS has put the whole world on an emotional roller coaster. One day we all get elated with a headline like "SARS virus gene unlocked," with the article promising cures and vaccines in the near future. Then a few days later, we read about a whole province being declared in a state of calamity because of one SARS case.

I don't want to reinforce these terrible mood swings, but let me use a "good news, bad news" format to help us take stock of where we are now, drawing on the more staid (albeit dull) technical reports coming out of medical journals and websites of the World Health Organization and the US Centers for Disease Control.

Let's start off with SARS' infectiousness, especially because we keep hearing about "super-spreaders" or people who seem to pass on infections rapidly. The bad news is that these super-spreaders do exist, not just for SARS but for any disease. Scientists are still trying to figure out why this happens but this phenomenon certainly exists and it may be related to the stage of infection.

The good news is that not everyone who comes down with SARS is a super-spreader. Infections seem to take place only with close contact with patients, with most of the transmission taking place in hospitals. The problem (oops, bad news) is that in many poorer countries, including the Philippines, many patients will probably never reach a hospital and infections will take place in homes and in communities.

Will SARS evolve into a pandemic like that of influenza in 1918 which killed millions? The bad news is that we can't really project that far ahead. The statistics can be alarming, with the way new cases seem to be cropping up each day. The good news is that while the figures do rise rather quickly, they may not be as bad as it seems. When you read the papers or watch TV newscasts, you get the impression that every other person in Hong Kong now has SARS. In reality, the number of probable SARS cases was 1,434 as of April 22, out of a total population of 7 million.

This is not to trivialize the suffering that comes with SARS illness and death, but let's compare SARS with some other diseases. In some southern African countries, one out of every three adults is now infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, yet the world seems to have forgotten this threat.

One could argue that HIV is transmitted mainly by sex while SARS is a respiratory disease, and thus so much more easily passed on. Well, if we want to use that analogy, then let's look at another respiratory disease, tuberculosis. In the Philippines, each year hundreds of thousands are infected with tuberculosis, with 20,000 dying, but no one seems to worry about TB, until a close friend or relative gets it, or dies. SARS is scary because it's so new, so unfamiliar.

But what about the death rates for SARS? I'm going to reverse my discussion here and start with the good news. Right now the mortality rate is reported to be hovering around 5 percent. That's quite low compared to many other diseases. In fact, I try to console more panicky friends and suggest that instead of thinking of a "5 percent death rate," we could look at SARS in terms of a "95 percent survival rate."

But there's a "bad news" angle to this. The current 5 percent figure is derived by dividing deaths by total cases, which is not a reliable method of computation because many of the cases are still new, and we still don't know if the patient will recover or die. For example, Hong Kong has 1,434 reported cases but only 560 patients can be classified as being "resolved" cases. Of these 560, 461 recovered and 99 died. Now, if you divide 99 by 560, you get a 17.6 percent death rate. Using this method of computation, Canada, with 13 deaths and 65 recoveries, has a similar SARS death rate of 16.6 percent.

We're going to have to wait for a few more weeks to get a more reliable trend, based on more cases. But I worry that as the outbreak spreads out to more impoverished areas, we'll probably get a death rate higher than 5 percent.

I also tend to be more pessimistic because SARS death rates may have a strong correlation to the state of health care services. I've been following newscasts on Chinese television and am quite alarmed with the trend of reports coming from poorer provinces such as Inner Mongolia, with both cases and deaths escalating quite quickly. (All this in spite of China's tendency to under-report cases.)

Death rates from diseases often depend not just on the nature of hospital facilities but on the overall health status of citizens. If a person's immune system is already weakened by having to fight so many diseases—tuberculosis, for example, in the Philippines—the probability of death from SARS increases.

This is taking us to the matter of cures. The bad news is that there is no cure yet for SARS. There was some media hype when scientists figured out the SARS virus' genetic structure, with hints that treatment and vaccines would not be far off. We forget that it's been almost 20 years since scientists identified HIV, the cause of AIDS, and we still don't have a cure or vaccine.

There are anti-viral drugs but these only slow down the virus' reproduction. One of these drugs, ribavirin, is being used for SARS patients but technically speaking, these anti-virals are not cures.

The good news is that patients do recover from SARS, even without "cures." SARS is terribly virulent but so are older diseases such as influenza and pneumonia. The SARS virus is a mutated version of the cold virus, which infects millions of people each day. Patients will recover from viral diseases even without drugs. The key is to strengthen the patients' own immune systems.

Next Tuesday let's look at the good and bad news around this matter of strengthening people's immune systems, as well as questions about SARS prevention.

NO BREAKTHROUGH EXPECTED US, North Korea begin nuclear talks

BELJING—US Assistant Secretary of State James Kelly sat down for talks on Wednesday with North Korea aimed at resolving a standoff over Pyongyang's suspected nuclear weapons program, but few expect a breakthrough.

With North Korean negotiator Li Gun not considered senior enough to cut deals, diplomats said the first formal face-off between Washington and Pyongyang since the crisis began last October was likely to yield only plans for more talks.

Kelly and Li were huddled behind closed doors at the Diaoyutai State Guest House, the walled garden compound where China receives visiting dignitaries, South Korea's YTN cable news network reported.

A US Embassy spokesperson said the three-day talks were going forward as planned, but declined to give any details.

North Korea wants a security guarantee from the United States and says it needs a powerful deterrent to stave off the threat of attack. Washington says Pyongyang must scrap its nuclear program before it will offer a guarantee.

This wide gulf between the two was unlikely to be bridged this week and the Beijing meetings marked the start of what is likely to be a lengthy process to defuse the crisis.

Both sides staked out tough positions ahead of the talks, with Secretary of State Colin Powell saying the United States would not be intimidated by a nuclear armed North Korea and could "do whatever might be required" in face of such a threat.

North Korea's air force began long-distance flight training in moves apparently aimed to counter US fighter jet tactics used in the war in Iraq, South Korea's defense ministry said.

And Pyongyang railed against "US imperialists," although analysts said it would be under pressure to keep the lines of communication open take a more measured tone at the talks.

China, widely seen as a little more than a facilitator in the discussions, hosted a working breakfast with the US delegation ahead of the multilateral talks. One analyst said China would keep to the sidelines as much as possible.

"The purpose of these talks is to get started, for us to be able to lay out the means for a verifiable and irreversible end to North Korea's nuclear program," US State Department spokesperson Richard Boucher said in Washington.

"I'm sure the North Koreans will lay out their positions as well," he said.

The Korean peninsula remains the Cold War's last flash point and recalcitrant North Korea, which talks regularly about war being imminent, fears it could be the next target after the quick US military campaign in Iraq.

US President George W. Bush, who has bracketed North Korea in an "axis of evil" with pre-war Iraq and Iran, told magazine reporters on Tuesday he has no current plans for another war.

Washington wants the North Koreans to close down their nuclear program to end a crisis festering since October.

"Apart from agreeing on the continuation of dialogue, I am not expecting much to come out of this," said an Asian diplomat in Beijing. "They are not going to be seeing eye to eye on many things."

China, which invited the two sides, would play "honest broker" to keep the talks moving, the diplomat said.

A breakthrough offer from the North Korean side seemed unlikely. Li would be unable to offer major concessions or cut deals due to his relatively junior rank and would be limited to discussing procedural matters, a Western diplomat said.

"He will have very, very little negotiating room," he said.

North Korea threw the talks into doubt last week with a statement saying it was "successfully reprocessing" nuclear fuel rods. It later corrected what analysts said was a translation error to say it was on the verge of reprocessing the rods, a precursor to making bombs.

The nuclear standoff began in October, when Washington said the North admitted to an active covert program to make highly enriched uranium for nuclear arms beside a plutonium program frozen under a 1994 pact with the United States.

This time, the US goal is to eliminate, rather than merely freeze, those programs—a tall order, experts say.

Yokohama Tire Philippines to Boost Production Capacity 25%, centered on High-Performance Tires

Tokyo—The Yokohama Rubber Co., Ltd., has announced that Yokohama Tire Philippines, Inc., a passenger tire manufacturing and marketing subsidiary, will upgrade its facilities to boost production. The initiative will begin in April. By the end of the year, annual capacity will expand from 2 million units, to 2.5 million. The upgrade will cost around 2 billion yen.

Yokohama Tire Philippines will step up production of 16-inch and larger high-performance passenger car tires and of recreational vehicle tires, for which demand is growing internationally. This subsidiary currently makes passenger tires of 13-to-16 inches. By year-end, 16-inch and larger models and recreational vehicle tires should account for about 30% of production. The upgrade will entail the construction of new facilities on that company's current property.

Yokohama Tire Philippines was established in April 1996, started production in January 1998 and has been profitable since the beginning. The new facilities will feature highly efficient lines that simply categorize models and sizes. About 90% of its output is exported to Europe, the Middle East, and other ASEAN nations. The balance is for the aftermarket and Japanese automakers in the Philippines.

Shiites protest occupation; US slams France

KERBALA, Iraq—Iraqi clerics called fresh anti-US protests Wednesday at the climax of a pilgrimage by hundreds of thousands of Shiite Muslims, as US officials said bluntly that erstwhile ally France should be punished for its opposition to the US-led invasion of Iraq.

Washington's outburst came despite France's announcement that it was prepared to heed US calls for a swift suspension of economic sanctions against Iraq without UN certification that it was free of weapons of mass destruction.

US ally Australia meanwhile hit back at charges by UN disarmament chief Hans Blix that coalition intelligence about Iraqi weapons programs had been "shaky," insisting a "smoking gun" would yet be found to justify the US-led ouster of Saddam Hussein's regime.

But the coalition came under fresh fire from UN officials for obstructing post-war relief and reconstruction, even as the US civil administrator, retired Gen. Jay Garner, pressed on with a tour of Iraq's battered infrastructure to assess the needs.

In the Shiite holy city of Kerbala, 80 km south of Baghdad, loudspeaker trucks had been touring since Tuesday evening calling for a huge anti-US demonstration the following morning.

"We invite you to join a peaceful protest against the foreign occupation which will leave from the south gate of the Imam Hussein mausoleum," the city's main shrine, the loud-hallers said.

Even before the kick-off time for the rally, chants of "No to America and Saddam, yes to Islam" rang out around the city, from which US troops have kept a discreet distance throughout the pilgrimage.

Organizing committee member Sheikh Raed Haidari said the protest would also target Iraqi National Congress chief Ahmad Chalabi, a deeply secular Shiite regarded by the US military as a possible future leader of Iraq.

"We refuse occupation, we want an elected government that represents the people," Sheikh Raed said.

In a development likely to further inflame tensions between the coalition and Iraq's majority Shiite community, a prominent cleric charged that he had been beaten by US troops.

"Our arrest by the Americans was worse than the arrests that Saddam ordered against our students," Sheikh Mohammed al-Fartusi told Abu Dhabi television.

Fartusi, whose followers said he was detained Sunday along with five other Shiites, reappeared in Baghdad on Tuesday to cheers from hundreds of supporters who had held protests for two days.

"We were beaten... spent a night with our hands tied behind our backs," Fartusi said, adding however that an American officer did turn up and offer an apology.

"It was disgusting. Despite that none of our young men has pointed a weapon against America... but next time, God alone knows what popular anger could lead to?" the cleric warned.

Indonesian cleric Bashir tried for treason US planners underrated Iraqi Shiites, report says

JAKARTA—An Indonesian Muslim cleric accused of leading the regional terror network blamed for the Bali bombing went on trial for treason here Wednesday under blanket security.

Abu Bakar Bashir, the alleged "emir" of Jemaah Islamiyah (JI), is charged with trying to topple the government and set up an Islamic state.

JI, which is thought linked to Osama bin Laden's al-Qaida network, is suspected of staging the bombing of two Bali nightspots which killed 202 people last October and of involvement in a string of other bloody attacks in the region.

A deafening shout of "Allahu Akbar" (God is Great) arose from Bashir's supporters as the white-bearded cleric entered the packed court to answer the charge of treason, punishable by up to 20 years' jail.

Bashir, wearing a long white shirt and white skullcap, sat calmly as prosecutors read a chilling indictment accusing him of bombing churches, plotting to assassinate the woman who is now president and conspiring to blast US targets in Singapore.

Bashir is not accused of involvement in the Bali blasts.

"I absolutely object to the trial. The whole thing is a slander made up by the United States," a defiant Bashir told reporters as he was led back to a cell after the hearing was adjourned till April 30.

The trial is seen as a test case of the government's willingness to prosecute terror suspects. Before the Bali blasts, leaders of the world's most populous Muslim nation denied that JI even exists in their country and shrugged off foreign criticism that they were soft on terrorism.

Prosecutors said the 64-year-old cleric in 1993 co-founded "an organization called Jama'atul minal-Muslimum or al Jemaah al Islamiyah."

He is "the leader and organizer of treason with the intention of overthrowing the government, namely to realize plans to establish an Islamic State of Indonesia..." said chief prosecutor Hasan Madani.

The indictment says Bashir authorized the Christmas Eve bombings of churches and priests in 2000 which killed 19 people in Indonesia.

He is said to have approved a plot to bomb US interests in Singapore which was foiled with the arrest of 13 JI suspects there.

The cleric is also accused of ordering the assassination of current President Megawati Sukarnoputri when she was still vice president. Another JI member, Mukhlis, is said to have refused that order because it was not feasible.

Bashir, according to the indictment, "disseminated a teaching on jihad as the noblest and highest deed through waging war against any party that obstructs the upholding of the words of Allah, which means war in its literal sense."

The indictment accuses him of conspiring with leading JI members Hambali, Zulkarnaen, Imam Samudra and Mukhlis.

Hambali, as former operations chief of JI, is one of Asia's most wanted men.

Samudra and Mukhlis, who is said to be Hambali's replacement, are among 30 people awaiting trial for the Bali bombings and Zulkarnaen is on the wanted list.

WASHINGTON—US officials plotting the future of Iraq underestimated the organizational strength of the Shiite majority and are not prepared to prevent the rise of an anti-American, Islamic fundamentalist government, The Washington Post reported on Wednesday.

The newspaper, quoting Bush administration officials, reported that US intelligence reports reaching top officials throughout the government this week said the Shiites appear to be much more organized than was thought. Shiites make up about 60 percent of the Iraqi population and were oppressed for decades under the rule of ousted President Saddam Hussein.

In a show of political strength, hundreds of thousands of Shiite Muslims filled the holy city of Kerbala on Tuesday in a long-banned pilgrimage marked by religious fervor and chants of "Yes to Islam, No to America."

A meeting of generals and admirals at the Pentagon on Monday turned into a spontaneous teach-in on Iraq's Shiites and the US strategy for containing Islamic fundamentalism in Iraq, the article said.

US officials said this week that as the administration plotted to overthrow Saddam Hussein's government, too little attention was paid to the dynamics of religion and politics in the region. They also said the administration failed to fully appreciate the force of Shiite aspirations and is now concerned that those sentiments could lead to a fundamentalist government, the newspaper reported.

"It is a complex equation, and the US government is ill-equipped to figure out how this is going to shake out," a State Department official told The Washington Post. "I don't think anyone took a step backward and asked, 'What are we looking for?' The focus was on the overthrow of Saddam Hussein."

According to the newspaper, some US intelligence analysts and Iraq experts said they warned the Bush administration before the war about overthrowing Hussein's government without having anything to replace it. But officials told the newspaper the concerns were either not heard or were low on the priority list of post-war planning.

Dog has as many lives as a cat US sugar lobby hits WHO report urging cutback in sweets intake CLEARLAKE, California—A dog named Dosha may have as many lives as a cat.

She was hit by a car, shot in the head and kept in a freezer for two hours, but she survived and is now doing well under a veterinarian's care.

Local animal groups and the Humane Society of the United States have begun fund-raising efforts to pay for her care.

Last Tuesday, Dosha was hit by a car. A Clearlake police officer reported to the scene and no one could tell him who owned the dog.

Officer Bob MacDonald shot the dog, apparently to save her the pain of her injuries. Dosha, presumed dead, was taken to Animal Control, where she was put in a freezer.

About two hours later, Denise Johnson, Animal Control's interim director, was at the impound facility and was told of the incident.

"Apparently, it was assumed dead," Johnson said. "I went to the freezer and found that she was alive and cold."

She had hypothermia and a gunshot wound, but no broken bones from the car accident, Johnson said.

Police are investigating.

LONDON—An effort to get an increasingly flabby world to stop eating so much sugar ran head-on into the US sugar lobby, which claims the dangers of the sweet stuff are being overstated.

People should get no more than 10 percent of their daily calories from sugar and other high-calorie sweeteners, the World Health Organization will recommend in a report on Wednesday.

That guideline is among several in WHO's attempt at a global strategy on health aimed at preventing such threats as heart disease, obesity, cancer and diabetes. It was immediately attacked by the Sugar Association, which represents US growers and refiners.

"Taxpayers' dollars should not be used to support misguided, non-science-based reports which do not add to the health and well-being of Americans, much less the rest of the world," Sugar Association chief Andrew Briscoe wrote the director general of WHO.

Briscoe said his group "will exercise every avenue available to expose the dubious nature" of the report, "including asking Congress to challenge future funding of the United States' $406 million contribution to the WHO."

Briscoe cited a far more lenient US study on sugar—one by the National Academy of Sciences in September that found no conclusive evidence people suffered nutritionally until their sugar intake exceeded 25 percent of daily calories.

"They completely ignored this key report," Briscoe said.

Philip James, chair of the International Obesity Task Force, said the panel did consider the Academy of Sciences report, along with scores of others. The draft was discussed extensively at international nutrition conferences, he said.

"It went out not only to explicit peer reviewers but, for the first time, it was posted on the Web. In fact, it's gone through a bigger peer review than any other WHO report ever," he said. "That was done because it was recognized to be controversial from an industry point of view."

It is precisely because the WHO is a global agency distanced from elections and the need for campaign funds that it was able to take such a strong stand on sugar, James said.

Half of the adults in Europe and 61 percent in the United States are overweight, and the epidemic is spreading around the globe as Western lifestyles infiltrate new areas, experts say.

Orphanages spring up in Kashmir as war breaks up families

By Mujtaba Ali Ahmad

SRINAGAR, India—Swirling his colorful scarves through the air, the juggler draws a laugh from the 5-year-old boy wrapped in a blanket in a drafty, red brick orphanage on a Kashmiri mountaintop.

"It is so freaky how he makes colorful circles with those strips of cloth," says a beaming Aljaz Ahmad Rather.

Aljaz has rarely smiled since his father, a separatist militant, was killed in a gunbattle with Indian security forces three years ago. Left destitute, his mother couldn't care for him and so sent him to the Garden Palace orphanage.

Thirteen years of violence in Jammu-Kashmir, India's only state with a Muslim majority, have taken a toll on the Himalayan region's families. Some 80,000 children have been orphaned or abandoned, the Jammu-Kashmir Orphans Trust estimated after a survey last year.

Most of the children, ages 3-15, have lost parents to cross-fires, land mine explosions and gunbattles during the insurgency by separatist Muslim rebels who have fought since 1989 for Kashmir's independence or merger with Islamic Pakistan.

Before the rebellion, Kashmir had one orphanage, the Garden Palace, where Aljaz is the youngest of 52 residents. Now there are more than a dozen orphanages, and five more are being built.

"It is not just the militancy that has led to the proliferation of orphanages, although it is the biggest contributing factor," said Abdul Rashid Hanjoo, general secretary of the Orphans Trust.

Khaksar Mohammad Maqbool, a Muslim cleric, said traditional Islamic values eroded since the 1980s in the portion of Kashmir that is in India.

"In the old days, when a family member died, his dependents would be taken care of by the relatives, who lived as one big family," Maqbool said. "Not only has old kinship disappeared, but so has compassion."

Private organizations provide shelter, food, education and health care for about 1,500 orphans in spite of limited funds.

"We can't reach out to all. But whatever we do, it is still a tough task to deliver, with little money and no government support," said Hanjoo at the Orphans Trust.

He thinks the lack of money available for orphanages is an indication that Kashmiris—traditionally hospitable and compassionate in a tightly knit society—have become more impersonal and less caring.

Maqbool agreed. "With the collapse of the sociopolitical creed after armed rebellion broke out, people have been left spiritually naked," he said.

But he added that the deaths of more than 61,000 people, mostly Muslims, to violence have overtaken Kashmiris' ability to deal with orphans.

Hameed-Ullah, 35, director of the Garden Palace orphanage, said institutions are helping save children's lives as well as preventing them from becoming street beggars or household servants and missing out on education, which is highly valued in Kashmiri society.

Both Hameed-Ullah and Maqbool feel however, that Islam requires individuals to take responsibility for orphans. They note the Quran, which lays down most rules for an Islamic society, exhorts Muslims to be good to orphans and doesn't mention orphanages.

"Islam does not want Muslims to make impersonal acts of charity," Maqbool said.

Akhtar Wali, a 12-year-old dressed in a long, woolen Kashmiri tunic, considers the Garden Palace his home. It's where he has learned about love and affection from Hameed-Ullah and the other children.

"I don't remember anything about my parents," Akhtar says. "The caretaker treats all of us as his own children. The others are my brothers."

US soldiers not exempt from SARS check

By Tonette Orejas
PDI Central Luzon Desk

CLARK SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONE—American troops arriving here from Japan, one of three countries recently placed on the Department of Health's alert list, were not exempted from undergoing health checks for symptoms of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS).

The about 200 American soldiers that reached Clark's Diosdado Macapagal International Airport here via a chartered plane of the North American Airlines before noon Tuesday were required to accomplish a DOH checklist on their health condition.

Aside from Dr. Semando Sandalo, the DOH medical quarantine officer at the DMIA, the DOH also sent a team of five medical personnel to maintain a SARS desk and assess the information on the checklist. Sandalo said this was the standard form used at the Nafa and other official entry ports in the country.

The Inquirer saw Sandalo boarding the plane for what he called a "random inspection of passengers." He got off the plane after less than 10 minutes. Asked if this duration was enough to spot sick passengers, he said the time was sufficient because the US troops "looked healthy anyway."

Earlier in an interview with reporters, Sandalo said US military doctors did not give him a certification vouching that the members of the US contingent arriving via the DMIA were all SARS-free.

"I am the one who will determine if they are SARS-free or not," he said, indicating that the responsibility rested on local health officials.

Three ambulances were placed on standby to bring anyone showing SARS symptoms to the local quarantine center at the Jose B. Lingad Memorial Regional Hospital in the City of San Fernando, some 30 km from Clark. Sandalo did not report detecting anyone with SARS symptoms.

Members of the US contingent formed a single line at the passenger's terminal, passing the SARS desk before they were allowed to enter Clark, which for almost a century was the US' largest military air base.

Sandalo said US soldiers who had arrived on Monday night and two more batches coming into Clark up to Tuesday night would be required to undergo the same procedures.

Capt. Burrell Parmer, the US military spokesperson of Balikatan-03, said all visiting forces were properly informed on the use of the checklist. He said military medical personnel had also made sure that all soldiers were healthy before departure schedules.

At least 1,200 American troops participating in the two-week Balikatan-03 are also banned from leaving the exercise sites in Luzon because the "threat level (in the Philippines) is high," Parmer said.

It was the Philippine government's Department of Defense that provided the assessment on the threat situation in the country. He declined to elaborate, citing security concerns.

To make sure that forces were well protected, Parmer said "liberty" (the military term for off-duty hours used for recreation activities) from April 25 to May 9 would have to be reduced at the discretion of the commanders of the US Army and Marine Corps units joining the war games.

"Our main mission here is to train... not to party," he said.

In the event of an attack by terror groups, Parmer said. "Of course, we will defend ourselves."

But he said he was not anticipating that attack, noting that the Armed Forces of the Philippines and the US Armed Forces had put in place adequate security arrangements for the protection of forces, including 2,500 Philippine troops from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Air Force.

Maj. Vicente Batac, Parmer's counterpart, said the communities around the training areas in Clark, Fort Magsaysay in Nueva Ecija, and Ternate in Cavite, were "relatively safe."

Parmer said the US is spending nearly $7 million in this Balikatan, the 19th since these types of large-scale combined military exercises were held in 1981 for the inter-operability of forces.

About $120,000 have been allotted for humanitarian and civic projects in villages near exercise sites. At least $1.3 million, earmarked for contracting expenses, are expected to directly go to the local economy.

Court orders Cebu gov't to pay couple

By Jolene R. Bulambot
PDI Visayas Bureau

CEBU CITY—The couple who lost their two children during a landslide in an upland barangay won a court battle against the Cebu City government and Barangay Buhisan here.

Cebu Regional Trial Court Judge Agapito Hontanosas, in an April 4 decision, ordered the city government and Barangay Buhisan to pay a total of P430,000 to spouses Eduardo Wilson Nadela Sr. and his wife Noema whose children died in a landslide in the barangay in 1999.

Judge Hontanosas found the city government as well as Barangay Buhisan "negligent" or "at fault" in constructing a road project in a quarry site in the barangay.

The court said such negligence was the "proximate cause" of the deaths of the minor victims.

"It is the finding of the Court that the defendants failed to exercise extraordinary diligence in the construction of the road project," Hontanosas said.

The Nadela couple filed a damage suit against the city government and Barangay Buhisan after their children, Eduardo Wilson Jr., 10, and John Carlo, 6, died in the accident sometime in January 1999.

In his April 4 order, Hontanosas directed the city government as well as Barangay Buhisan to pay the Nadela couple P200,000 for each of the victims as actual and compensatory damages.

The judge also ordered the defendants to pay the attorney's fees worth P30,000 and another P10,000 for the litigation expenses as well as to pay the cost of the litigation.

He also declared Menandro Diola, barangay chief of Buhisan, not liable in his personal capacity for damages arising from the incident. The judge, however, stressed that the city government is liable.

Hontanosas cited a provision under the New Civil Code that states that the city is liable for damages for the death or injuries of any person due to the defective condition of any public works under its control and supervision.

The couple alleged that the city government and the barangay neglected to place "danger signs" and install safety measures within the road construction area.

The site is a limestone quarry two meters wide and eight feet high. It is located along the newly opened mountain road with a 30-degree slope.

The court noted that prior to the incident, the city government supervised a barangay road construction project in Sitio Nazareth, Barangay Buhisan.

The road project cut through the slopes of the hilly portion of Buhisan and exposed a "conglomeratic" section of the Carcar formation that has a sandy matrix and terrace grace deposits.

Residents in the area resorted to quarrying the sand and gravel thus creating a hollow area. The road cut also left some overhanging materials in the process.

Ecija bishop calls jueteng patrons 'unchristian'

DAGUPAN CITY—For the nth time, Lingayen-Dagupan Archbishop Oscar Cruz has issued a pastoral letter on the illegal numbers game, telling his parishioners that patronizing jueteng is "unchristian."

"Persons who know anyone who indulges in the illegal numbers game but keep quiet and do nothing cannot call themselves Christians," Cruz said.

"You must not call yourselves Christians (because) a Christian is someone who loves others. Letting them (bet on jueteng) is in truth hating them because you allow juetengeros to steal their money (and) you allow them to covet the money of others," Cruz said in a pastoral letter to be read during masses in his diocese on Sunday.

Cruz, also chair of the Krusada ng Bayan-Jueteng Free Philippines, has been waging a battle against jueteng, which he described as a "racket that continues to fool the people."

"Please join me in the rational and local effort to stop jueteng. Its vice continues to fool people because we do not act against it. This racket makes jueteng lords very rich because we do not denounce them," he said in his letter.

The letter also blamed the people for their complacency and criticized jueteng lords and their protectors and promoters.

"Jueteng is a violation of the seventh commandment, 'Thou shall not steal,' and an offense against the tenth commandment, 'Thou shall not covet thy neighbors' goods,'" Cruz said.

"But it thrives in decent neighborhoods and in an upright community because good people do nothing about it."

He described jueteng as a "loud symbol of laziness for decent work and dependence on chance."

"It is a clear sign of deceit and corruption," he said.

Despite his tirades against the numbers game, Cruz said the game is still a "socio-moral plague" that thrives in communities, and that the financiers and their benefactors still say blatant lies and manufacture stories against him.

He said he is not affected by these stories. "I look to the time when 'we can live with legitimate pride and honor that we finally have a jueteng-free nation,'" Yolanda Sotelo-Palacio, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

Puffer fish kills 4 kids, hospitalizes 30 others

CEBU CITY—Four children died while almost 30 other persons were hospitalized after eating puffer fish also known as "burring" in separate incidents in Lapulapu and Cebu cities on Sunday and Monday.

In Lapulapu City, three young siblings died while 21 others were brought to the hospitals last Sunday after eating puffer fish for lunch in Kaubian Island, a densely-populated islet one hour by boat from Mactan Island.

The fatalities were identified as Angela, 11, Stephen, 7 and Rosamaria, 3, all surnamed Estrera.

Stephen died on Sunday afternoon in the boat going to the hospital, while Angela and Rosamaria died on Monday morning and afternoon respectively at the government-run Vicente Sotto Memorial Medical Center (VSMC) in Cebu City.

Their elder sister Christina, 12, was under observation at the VSMC. Their parents, Sanito, 57, and Thelma were brought to the Lapulapu District Hospital (LDH).

Fourteen victims including the neighbors of the couple were brought to the LDH while seven others were brought to the VSMC.

Sanito said he was the one who cooked the puffer fish eaten by his family for lunch on Sunday. He said he had prepared and served puffer fish to his family many times before and nothing had happened to them.

In Cebu City, three-year-old Geraldyn Garcia died in Alaska, Mambaling on Monday while 10 others including her one-year-old sister were brought to the Cebu City Medical Center (CCMC) for treatment after eating puffer fish.

Geraldyn complained of dizziness at around 5 p.m. but her parents brought her to a faith healer instead of the hospital.

Geraldyn's father, Renato, said they did not expect his daughter to be poisoned with the puffer fish. Geraldyn died at around 6 p.m.

Geraldyn's one-year-old sister Geneva and nine other relatives were later brought to the hospital because of severe stomachache and headache. Roberta Carolasan, 68, grandmother of Geraldyn who cooked the puffer fish was also brought to the hospital.

Renato, who just took two pieces of the fish, was spared. Renato's wife, Corazon, a market vendor, was also spared because she was not around during their lunch.

Renato said the puffer fish they ate were given to them by a neighbor. Junex Napallacan, PDI Visayas Bureau

City officials warn of more fish kills in the Davao River

DAVAO CITY—Another fish kill may occur in the Davao River if the city government does not install stricter measures to protect the tributary.

Various species of fish surfaced belly up in the river on Sunday after "sticky fluid" allegedly flowed into the river.

Councilor Isidro Ungab, chair of the Davao River Conservation Coordinating Committee, said it is high time the city council approved the Davao River Code.

During the council's session on Tuesday, Ungab blamed the city council for failing to act on his proposed code in 2001.

Under the code, 15-meter buffer zones would be set aside near residential, industrial and agricultural areas to filter wastes going to the river.

In Sunday's fish kill, unofficial tests conducted by the Davao City Water District showed traces of pesticides in the Davao River.

But the Bureau of Fisheries and Aquatic Resources had yet to come out with the result of its tests even though it used devices similar to those used by DCWD. Ungab said he could not do anything but wait for the BFAR results.

The city council agreed to conduct an inquiry aimed at unmasking those responsible for the fish kill. Anthony Alada, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Legal dispute threatens Baguio's source of water

BAGUIO CITY—A single mature tree can store 5,000 to 6,000 cubic meters of water, underscoring the importance of urban forest in a city like Baguio, which is dependent on aquifers for its water supply.

Albert Arenas, assistant manager of the Baguio Water District, said a 10- to 20-year-old tree could hold that much volume of water.

"If you cut down a single mature tree, you definitely lose the 5,000 to 6,000 cubic meters. This should make you appreciative of the value of trees in our watershed," Arenas said.

His statement came after the city's largest watershed, the Busol Watershed, faced the danger of being occupied because of a legal dispute between the BWD and the city government and the National Commission on Indigenous Peoples.

The NCIP stopped the fencing of the Busol Watershed until the ancestral land claims there were resolved.

"If we cannot fence this, we may lose our watershed and our water. We really have to push through with the fence," Arenas said.

ing," Arenas said.

He said the city needs 94,000 cubic meters of water a day but the BWD can only provide 22,000 cu. m.

"For the city to effectively provide water for all its people, it needs to pump out 50,000 to 60,000 cu. m. more," he said.

But the city has only groundwater as its source of water. Aside from Busol, its other watersheds are in Buyog, Crystal Cave, Sto. Tomas and Camp 8.

The Camp 8 watershed includes the Baguio General Hospital reservation, which can be affected by the city government's plan to build a flyover there despite residents' opposition.

But Arenas said the effect on the water table would be minimized because the flyover's posts would be set up in the middle of the road. Digging for these can, however, alter the water table.

Another disputed watershed within Camp John Hay is also in danger should the city push through with the construction of a road that will pass through the watershed of Happy Hollow Village. Frank Cimatu, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

British teachers, studees build schools for Aeta kids

FORDING rivers and scrambling up mountain tracks, British Council Director, Gill Westaway, last week opened three schools for the Aetas living in remote areas around Tarlac.

Known as Traditional Origins Ethnic Education Schools (TOES), these buildings are constructed, owned and maintained by the villagers themselves.

Teachers are supplied by the Department of Education, according to a news release.

Teachers and their students from a school in southern England and the remote Shetland Islands of Scotland raised funds to build Fleet and Happy Hansel schools in Dueg, San Clemente.

"At the heart of the British Council's mission is a desire to create learning opportunities between the peoples of our two countries," said Westaway during the opening ceremony in Dueg.

The children's enthusiasm for learning was palpable as donations of books and writing materials were handed over to the teachers in preparation for the opening of schools in June.

Some 20 TOES schools have been constructed since the project began in 1991 after the eruption of Mt. Pinatubo dis-

Protecting Makiling reserve a tough climb

By Romulo Ponte
Los Baños, Laguna

THE AGENCY mandated to take care of the Mt. Makiling Forest Reserve (MFR) is facing tough challenges in maintaining ecological balance in the area.

The 4,224.37-ha reserve, which was established through Proclamation No. 106 issued in 1910 by then Governor General W. Cameron Forbes, is now home to about 1,225 farmer-settlers who equally assert domain over it.

Dr. Edwino S. Fernando, director of the Makiling Center for Mountain Ecosystems (MCME), said the farmers were claiming "inalienable" rights to cultivate portions of the reserve for their livelihood.

Makiling, which covers an area of 24,985 ha, was given special consideration among all the Philippine mountains during last year's celebration of the International Year of Mountains, according to Fernando. The celebration was participated in by agencies and organizations concerned with mountains, like the Department of Environment and Natural Resources, Department of Tourism, and the Mountaineering Federation of the Philippines.

"These are the groups—including mountain climbers—that are helping clean up areas in Mt. Makiling. They [members] would climb mountains and pick up the garbage," Fernando said.

Migrants

Lowland farmers have been moving into the Makiling reserve since 1898. A study conducted by the College of Environmental Science and Management (Cesam) of the University of the Philippines-Los Baños a few years ago revealed that the population in the forest reserve had grown 20 percent yearly over the last 10 years.

Latest UPLB reports showed that about 45 percent or 1,899 ha of MFR land had lost its forest cover and were instead used for farming.

But the settlers, according to Fernando, were already given stern instructions not to build new houses and not to expand their farming areas. They were also given guidelines to venture into agro-forestry so as to enhance the sustainability of forest resources.

"Even the cutting of trees by farmers within the MFR is not permitted without clearance from legitimate authorities. Once anyone is caught cutting trees and building new houses, we will file charges against him in court," Fernando said.

The settlers have also been instructed to report new intruders to the MFR so that action may be taken against them.

A document obtained from the Cesam said bluntly that reserve authorities may even "arrest without warrant" anybody caught cutting or causing destruction to the reserved forests.

Republic Act No. 6967, which was signed into law by then President Corazon Aquino in 1989, vested "control, jurisdiction and administration of the MFR" anew on the UPLB. That authority had long been enjoyed by the university since 1960 by virtue of Proclamation No. 692 issued by then President Carlos P. Garcia.

Resistance

UPLB officials earlier found that not all farmers inside the forest reserve area agreed with the occupancy conditions or guidelines.

On June 18, 1996, farmers resisted UPLB supervision of the reserve, especially when the university tried to implement the Makiling Forest Reserve Master Plan. The UPLB Perspective, official student publication, had quoted some of the organized farmers that the plan was "not clear to them."

The Nagkakaisang Magsasaka sa Pagtataguyod ng Bundok Makiling, represented by Zacarias Manalo, said the university did not recognize its members as legitimate residents of MFR.

An officer of the Kaisahan ng Samahan ng mga Magsasaka sa Bundok Makiling, a federation of seven farmer organizations, claimed that "we have inherited this land from our forefathers. It is from here that we get our source of livelihood."

Most likely, Fernando knew these realities too well. In a speech during the launching of the IYM in January last year, he said: "Mountains are homes to nearly 10 percent of the Philippine population. No less than 30 percent of the population also depends fully or partly on mountain resources for a living."

But

But he also said that "the risks associated with mountain environments have grown rapidly with increasing [number of] residents and tourist populations, intensification and diversification of land uses and infrastructure development."

Forest guards deployed at the MFR regularly monitor violations that destroyed the forests in the reserved area, Fernando said. "We will not hesitate to sue them [violators] in court," he warned.

The MFR head, though emphasizing to strictly implement conservation measures of the entire reserved area, said there were plenty of reasons to promote the area for eco-tourism.

In its brochure, the MCME stated that the MFR was intended primarily for "training [...] for the advancement of scientific knowledge on forestry and natural resources."

Located 65 km southeast of Manila, the MFR is bounded by Laguna and Batangas, covering portions of the towns of Los Baños, Calamba, Bay [Laguna] and Sto. Tomas [Batangas].

The entire MFR area is a watershed zone. It has 60 perennial and intermittent streams, eight water intakes tapping the flow of perennial streams for domestic uses.

The brochure listed outdoor recreation and ecotourism points of interest, which include large areas of natural forest cover, mud spring, giant rocks, a panoramic view from the peaks, nature trails, flora and fauna, the Makiling Botanic Gardens, Center for Philippine Raptors, Makiling Rain Forest Park, Makiling Experimental and Demonstration Forest and the National Arts Center.

There are 2,038 species of flowering plants and ferns, 211 species of mosses, hundreds of species of algae and fungi, and mixed dipterocarp rain and mossy forests. There are also 45 species of mammals, 181 species of birds, 65 species of reptiles, 22 species of amphibians and hundreds of species of invertebrates.

Proclamation

To prevent the "unnecessary" development of Makiling, which may destroy the legendary mountain and eventually affect the MFR, then President Fidel V. Ramos signed Proclamation Order No. 1257 "designating certain areas surrounding the Makiling Forest Reserve as buffer zone."

The order was aimed at guiding local government units, entrepreneurs, developers, businessmen, landowners and other individuals on the use of the buffer zone.

tained at the municipal police station.

Cereno added that unlike Banahaw, which draws thousands of pilgrims and devotees of different religious orders, Makiling is famous for its eco-tourism sites, which visitors have come to respect.

Cereno noted that they had issued 102 claim cards for confiscated items, 50 of which were bladed weapons. Last year, they issued 360 cards.

The MCME, which governs the mountain, prohibits carrying of deadly and bladed weapons in the area, as well as liquor and illegal drugs. It also forbids cutting trees for tent pegs and bar campfires inside the mountain.

Volunteers said they had collected some 600 kilograms of garbage returned by hikers at entry points.

Spirit of volunteerism still alive

By Marlon Ramos
Los Baños, Laguna

THE SPIRIT of volunteerism did it for Makiling. And fortunately, hikers have also learned their lessons.

Officials of the Makiling Center for Mountain Ecosystems (MCME) said 200 volunteer-guides from various nongovernment organizations in Los Baños, Laguna, mostly from the University of the Philippines, helped prevent major accidents involving 7,000 hikers who flocked to the legendary Mt. Makiling during the Holy Week.

"Hikers and campers who came here last year understood the rules and regulations governing the activities inside the Makiling forest reserve. Unlike in Mt. Banahaw, trekkers here had undergone a basic seminar before they could enter the mountain," said Roberto Cereno, program leader of Make It Makiling 2003.

Close coordination with the municipal government of Los Baños and the local police had also helped minimize untoward incidents, Cereno added.

However, there were some who forgot. On Holy Wednesday, police arrested four teenagers, all from Cabuyao, Laguna, for illegal possession and use of marijuana inside the Makiling area. The suspects were de-

The WHO advised people worldwide earlier this month to avoid unnecessary travel to Hong Kong — the Amoy Gardens outbreak was one reason. Hong Kong wants the advisory lifted after seeing its travel and tourism industry devastated. Report from AFP AP and Reuters

Tourist arrivals in March down

PHILIPPINE tourist arrivals in March fell 9.9 percent from a year ago to 157,036 visitors due to concerns about the SARS scare and effects of the Iraq war.

The Department of Tourism said the SARS outbreak had caused fear among travelers, preventing them from leaving their countries.

Visitors from Hong Kong, one of those hardest hit by the SARS crisis, fell 39.3 percent to 9,806 visitors in March. Arrivals from Taiwan fell 17.7 percent to 6,328 and those from Japan dropped 6.3 percent to 28,807.

The DOT said continued fears of terrorist attacks against American citizens due to the US invasion on Iraq also led to dismal tourist arrivals in March. Tourists from the United States accounted for 31,236, or 19.9 percent, of the arrivals in March, down 22.8 percent from 40,485 a year ago.

"It is noted that Hong Kong and Taiwan... recorded declines in arrivals," the tourism department said.

Between January and March, however, tourist arrivals were up slightly by 2.6 percent to 495,390, the DOT said.

fifth "suspected" SARS case who could have been infected by the nursing aide who returned from Toronto earlier this month to attend to her ailing father.

The four other suspected cases are the nursing aide's father, a brother-in-law who served as her driver, an 11-year-old boy and a 2-year-old child. All developed a fever days after they came in close contact with the nursing aide; they were placed in isolation at the Research Institute for Tropical Medicine (RITM) in Alabang.

Two of the X-ray technicians have been placed under quarantine in the hospital's infirmary. They have not manifested any SARS-related symptoms but were in contact with the X-ray technician when she developed a fever.

The 39-year-old technician took the chest X-ray of the nursing aide on April 14. The nursing aide, who was then in isolation at the San Lazaro Hospital (SLH) for SARS-related symptoms, died of pneumonia the following day.

Health Secretary Manuel Dayrit said the sick nursing aide was not taken out of her isolation room; the X-ray machine was taken to her room instead.

The technician wore a protective mask and a hospital gown when she went inside the quarantine room, Dayrit said.

The World Health Organization has been recommending the use of personal protective equipment for all hospital staff who have to go inside SARS isolation rooms. The equipment are: N95 mask (which has a higher filtering capacity than an ordinary surgical mask), gloves, goggles, disposable gown, apron and footwear that can be decontaminated.

Dayrit yesterday ordered all hospitals to take any shortcuts in handling suspected SARS cases.

The X-ray technician developed a fever, muscle pain and body weakness last Friday and was placed in an isolation room at the SLH.

She is now "doing fine," Dayrit said.

"She has a fever, but she is in stable condition. She does not manifest any other symptoms of SARS," Dayrit told the INQUIRER.

The father of Adela health authorities said, died of colon cancer on Tuesday while under isolation. His blood samples and that of the nursing aide's have been sent abroad for SARS confirmatory testing.

RITM director Remigio Olveda said there were actually nine people who had close contact with the nursing aide and who were placed in isolation at the RITM but only the four had developed a fever.

The 11-year-old boy and another relative

(who had no fever) were released from the government hospital on Tuesday.

Six more contacts of the nursing aide remain in isolation at the RITM, including the brother-in-law and the 2-year-old. Their quarantine ends on April 26.

"The way things are going, there seems to be no immediate fear of a SARS outbreak. If (the nursing aide's) contacts really contracted the disease, they should be manifesting SARS symptoms by this time," said Olveda.

About 250 other relatives, friends and neighbors of the nursing aide had been asked to undergo a voluntary quarantine in the nurse's hometown of Alcala, Pangasinan. Dayrit said they should have no cause for concern because so far none of them have developed SARS symptoms.

Arafura Games off due to SARS

Duremdes steers SLR past Alaska

By June Navarro

IF THERE'S one team Kenneth Duremdes loves to beat, then it's got to be the Alaska Aces.

Duremdes did just that as he steered the Sta. Lucia Realtors to a gut-wrenching 94-90 win over the Aces in the Samsung PBA All Filipino Cup last night at the PhilSports Arena.

"It was very sweet. Anybody who got traded wants to prove something against his former team. That alone motivated me to work extra hard against Alaska," said Duremdes, who won four championships with the Aces.

Alaska shipped Duremdes, the league's MVP in 1998, to Sta. Lucia Realty right before the start of this year's Annual Rookie Draft in exchange for the Realtors' first-round pick and a switching of both teams' second-round picks.

Incidentally, the rookie picked by Alaska to take the place of Duremdes was the one who heatedly crossed paths with the former Adamson University standout.

Rookie Brandon Cablay, selected fifth overall by the Aces in the first round, engaged Duremdes in a verbal tussle while exchanging three-pointers in the final quarter.

The Realtors notched their sixth victory in 12 games, while the Aces, whose four-game streak got halted, slipped to 8-4.

Paragua surprises Torre

IM Mark Paragua stunned GM Eugene Torre to register his third straight victory and move to solo fourth spot after 18 rounds of the Shell National Open Rapid Chess grand finals yesterday at the DILG Multi-Purpose Hall in Quezon City. It was the 18-year-old Paragua's first win over Torre in five meetings. Torre dropped to solo third. Bong Villamayor retained the lead followed by Joey Antonio with four rounds left.

By Marc Anthony Reyes

THE DREADED SARS (Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome) has claimed its biggest casualty in sports so far—the 35-nation Arafura Games in Darwin, Australia.

Considered as the Olympics of Asia and the Pacific, the biennial meet is the latest sporting event that got cancelled due to the mysterious disease that has gripped the entire world in terror for the past month.

The Philippines was supposed to send more than 260 athletes in the Games with most of the delegation members coming from Mindanao, which has an existing sports, cultural and economic exchange with Australia's Northern Territory.

Philippine Sports Commissioner Butch Ramirez said he received a letter from Northern Territory chief minister Clare Martin and sports minister John Eklut, who cited the continued uncertainty about the availability of international teams and ongoing health concerns surrounding SARS.

The Games, where our very own Liza Dantla sparked with nine gold medals in the swimming pool in 1997, were supposed to be held May 17-25.

Ramirez said PSC chair Eric Buham accepted the cancellation with deep regret considering that the country already spent more than P1 million for the national athletes' preparation.

The Philippine delegation was composed of 110 athletes and officials from Mindanao, 75 from Visayas, 75 from the different national sports associations and six from Luzon.

Though there hasn't been any SARS case in Australia yet, Ramirez said the Australian officials were wary of the risk it would pose on their citizens considering that at least 3,000 athletes and officials mostly from SARS-plagued Asian countries confirmed their participation.

SARS has killed at least 230 people, mostly in Hong Kong and China, and infected at least 4,000 people worldwide.

Registrations for the eight-day Arafura Games had fallen by half, from about 5,000 in 2001 to 2,280 this year, as a number of teams and individuals withdrew amid the SARS outbreak.

The Judo and Lifesaving events had earlier been canceled because of declining registrations but it is the first major sporting event canceled in Australia due to SARS.

Other events canceled in the Asia-Pacific region include the women's world ice hockey championships in Beijing and the Shanghai and Singapore legs of the International Rugby Board's World Sevens series. The Asian Football Confederation has canceled an East Asian soccer meet and postponed qualifiers for the women's World Cup and the 2004 Olympics.

De Villas make move in Jr World.

By Jong Arcano

SISTERS Linnel and Debbie de Villa are providing the sideshow to what has become a coming-out party for the new jungolf stars in the Callaway Junior World national qualifying tournament in various venues.

Yesterday, the De Villa sisters strode past the favorites in their respective divisions with sound rounds and put themselves in strong contention to make it to the elite Philippine delegation for the world's most prestigious jungolf meet in San Diego.

Linnel, an incoming sophomore at Poveda, built a three-shot lead over Geleen Handog with her 90-172. Not to be out done, Linnel's little sister Debbie of the Greenhills Christian School inched two strokes ahead of Mia Piccio with a 77-162 at the Southwoods Legends.

While the De Villas got themselves a big fight ahead, Dotie Ardina, Jik Jik Abdon, Kristina Potenciano and Jayvee Agojo seem to have nailed their slots early in this event serving as the third leg of the Samsung Jungolf Tour.

As Class D play resumed after being postponed by a sudden downpour at the Riviera executive course, Ardina wasted no time in racing to a 22-stroke lead with rounds of 61-56 for a 117 total. Andrea Legaspi was at 145 after scoring 72-73.

Abdon was even hotter with his second straight sub-par round of 70 ushering him to a hefty 17-shot lead boys Class C at the Southwoods Legends.

Jayvee Agojo's superb consistency is setting her up for another blowout victory. She zoomed ahead by 10 in girls Class A with her second straight 73 for 146 total, leaving behind Marit Salvia who struggled with a 79 for 156.

Potenciano's 57 and 113 total gave her a nine-shot advantage over Andie Unson in girls Class E. There was a three-way tie in boys Class E involving JR Gonzales, Miguel Tabuena and Bino dela Paz.

The organizing committee headed by Rolando dela Cuesta and tournament chair Hector Martinez got the support of several companies to provide the prize package and boost the PBA funds in providing free legal aid to deserving indigents.

Tubod's Helen in Imelda

THE FEAR of a terrorist attack is finally gone?

I pose the question in the wake of Eric Buham's assurances that the Palarang Pam-bansa will finally push through in Tubod, Lanao del Norte, on May 4-11. Eric knows where he speaks of. As the PSC czar, Eric has the moral authority to say if it is go or not.

Still, my answer is, the fear will always be there. Mindanao is a strife-torn land and Tubod was a recent scene of a terrorist-inspired incident. Right at the arena where competitions are set to be played during the week-long Games.

Ate Glo herself has placed Davao and the city's environs under a state of emergency following several bomb blasts that killed more than 30 civilians, notably at both Davao's airport and international seaport. Just the other day, another terrorist-triggered blast injured four marine soldiers who were part of Ate Glo's advance party in Pikit, North Cotabato.

I am not trying to become Mr. Doomsday. I will not even dissuade our athletes and officials from going to Tubod.

The point I am trying to drive at is, in Mindanao the terrorist scare is for real. If the Palara is scheduled for play, say, in Bangued, Abra, I will say without thinking twice that, yes, let's do it there. Bangued is as safe a place as Vienna in Austria.

SPECTATOR

The papers have also reported that no less than 1,400 soldiers will be deployed in Tubod in a bid to ensure the safety of at least 5,000 athletes. Fine. What a commendable move. I even heard a top sports official say the rebels from a secessionist Muslim group from Mindanao have expressed their willingness to "hold their punches (guns/bombs?)" while the Palara is on. If true, I raise a glass to that. In abnormal times, a promise is more than the equivalent of a ray of hope.

Ah, hope. We can only hope, really. Hope that nothing untoward will happen from May 4 to May 11.

Hope that the 1,400 or so soldiers will really be dispatched for the Palara.

Hope that the 1,400 or so soldiers are well-trained at foiling would-be terrorists during the 7-day Games.

But safety is something that can't be guaranteed by any might made by man. Only God can guarantee safety. A fatalistic approach, you say? Not really. The Yanks have a way of saying it: If you gotta go, you gotta go.

To lick fear, like fear. Listen: Fear is something we just can't strike out from our hearts. It is as endemic as a child's madness with a toy balloon. And, like taxes, there is that fear we must learn to live with. Death. Inescapable.

Some people fear riding a plane. That's because they fear death. Again, listen. If a columnist starts to fear libel, he/she should immediately quit writing a column. If a runner fears defeat, in any form that is, he/she should better stop running and plant camote.

If there's someone worth our handshake when the Palara is finally on, it should go to Lanao del Norte Gov. Imelda Dinaporo. The lady, whom I have yet to meet but I'd rather not for fear of losing my timing "this late in my career," deserves more if one were to review her efforts in bringing the nation's premiere sportsfest to her turf. Enormous.

If Troy had a Helen, Tubod has an Imelda ready to snuff "a thousand bombs" out of an athlete's way. And, yes, fancy this: Terrorists are like flies. They are co-terminus with the existence of humanity.

So, fear not my dear athletes. Let's rumble and rumble in Tubod. Get set, ready, go!

Kitefest Info Bits

Flying Around the World

In China, the ninth day of the month is a "Kite Day" and is considered a big holiday.

Balinese Hindus believe that kite-flying is one of the favorite hobbies of their gods.

In the traditional Korean kite-flying season, kites with the words "Bad Luck Away and Good Luck Stay" are flown as high as the line will allow and then released. It is believed that each of these freed kites will carry away its owner's bad luck.

In Santiago de Secatepequez, Guatemala, people celebrate "All Saints Day" by flying large circular kites over the graves of the departed, "to release their souls".

Tour caravan off to Legaspi

By June Navarro

PICTURE this: 100 vehicles of different shapes and sizes snaking through the thoroughfares of Southern Luzon all the way to the Bicol region, all looking forward to witness the rebirth of the greatest cycling marathon in the country.

On board the 100-vehicle caravan from Manila to Legaspi City is the 500-strong entourage of the Tour Pilipinas 2003, a 15-stage, 18-day race well-augured as the revival of the summer spectacle on wheels.

Tour officials, cyclists, team officials, race personnel, sponsors, entertainers and members of the media from print and broadcast leave early this morning to form part of the race set to kick off with a 183-kilometer out-and-back course in Legaspi City on Saturday (April 26).

"This is it. The long wait is finally over. All the time and effort spent to prepare for this entire undertaking will now come to fore," said cycling godfather and Tour Pilipinas chair Bert Lina, who, along with Tour Pilipinas organizer Lito Alvarez and executive director Mar Mendoza spearheaded the year-long preparation of the Tour.

Prior to the departure, all kinks were already ironed out to ensure a smooth conduct of the Tour which got its sanction from the Philippine Amateur Cycling Association on Monday courtesy of its chair Lito Cruz.

This early, cycling teams are already in the peak of heating up the competition with Bowling Gold close to pampering its members and Pagcor Sports getting its full backing from Pagcor chair Efraim Genuino and team manager Luis Carlos.

NBN-4 will present a 30-minute highlight of the race on a daily basis while Sports Radio dzSR 918 kHz takes care of the blow-by-blow account of the Tour which is also backed by Accel, Lipovitan, BPI-MS, Longines, FedEx, and Mail & More. Other sponsors are SellaItalia, Vittoria, Philtranco and Look.

Aside from Bowling Gold and Pagcor Sports, 10 other teams will vie for fame and glory with the P1-million top team prize and P200,000 individual champion's purse in mind.

Private teams such as PLDT-NDD, Tandayag, Gilbey's Island Punch, Samsung and Intel, all boosted with a bevy of experienced and promising riders on their line-ups, clash with equally talented teams from the government.

All eyes on Jody, Gaby

DEFENDING champion Jody Coseteng and promising Gaby dela Merced will be on the spotlight when the simultaneous straggle of the fifth and sixth rounds of the 2003 SVI-Petron Grand Prix and the first two rounds of the Philippine National Touring Car Championships get going this weekend at the Subic International Raceway.

Coseteng, of Red Horse-Caltex, and Dela Merced, of Petron-Auto

Solutions, try to hold on to the lead in their respective categories in this annual series organized by the Sports Values Inc. in cooperation with Petron and the Subic Bay Metropolitan Authority.

Coseteng, who dominated two of the first four races held so far, seeks an all-important victory over his closest rivals Kookie Ramirez of Petron-SRA and Mike Anton of Red Bull-Auto Options in the Blaze-sponsored super saloon category.

Metro street crimes down—GMA

By Dona Pazzibugan

AN ECSTATIC President Macapagal-Arroyo claimed yesterday that her crusade against street crimes has started to bear fruit.

She said street crimes in Metro Manila have gone down since Feb. 21, when she gave officials of the Philippine National Police a dressing down for failing to protect the public against criminals.

"I'm happy that as result of my directive to the PNP in a command conference last Feb. 21, the station commanders are training the barangay tanods to fight criminality," she told barangay tanods of Metro Manila gathered at the Cuneta Astrodome in Pasay yesterday.

"Barely three weeks after that conference, street crimes went down to 152 cases compared to the 264 cases during the three weeks immediately preceding the Feb. 21 meeting," she declared.

The barangay tanods have undergone training from the PNP to fight crimes.

Ms Macapagal said aside from looking out for suspicious-looking strangers in their areas, the barangay tanods should also go after drug traffickers and perpetrators of illegal gambling.

"You may also monitor graft and corrupt practices among government officials," she added.

At an unprecedented command conference in Malacañang last February, the President scored PNP officials for not doing their job to protect the public from criminals.

She told PNP officials from Metro Manila, Central Luzon and Southern Tagalog that police response to street crimes "has not been satisfactory."

Street crimes include snatching of cell phones and jewelry, picking pockets, fighting among gangs, mugging, and selling of illegal drugs.

Days after the command conference, the President made surprise visits in police precincts in Tondo, Manila and in Pasay, where she caught commanders being lax on their job.

Aglipay to head fight vs drugs

By Christian V. Esguerra

DEPUTY Director Gen. Edgar Aglipay, who had been sacked as Metro Manila police chief for failing to curb illegal gambling under his jurisdiction, has been tapped to head a new anti-drug task force.

President Macapagal-Arroyo announced the appointment yesterday in the presence of Interior Secretary Jose Lina, the man who ordered Aglipay's relief during a massive police revamp last year.

Aglipay will head the task force while serving as police deputy chief for operations, the President said at the graduation rites for Metro Manila barangay men in Pasay City.

As the new anti-drug czar, Aglipay will closely coordinate with the Dangerous Drugs Board and the Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency, according to the President.

Sought for clarification later, Southern Police District chief Jose Gutierrez, who was present when Ms Macapaga announced the appointment, said the task force would be a "much stronger police component" in the government's campaign against illegal drugs.

At present, Gutierrez said the PDEA taps local and national police in its operations. Aglipay's task force would be in charge of these police units and coordinate their operations with the Palace-formed agency, he added.

Palace taps barangay men to contain SARS

SARS-fearing cops haul spitting nurse to jail

By Leila Salaverria

THREE members of the Makati police should pray that a nurse they apprehended during a traffic accident is free of the deadly SARS virus.

The nurse, identified as Reynaldo Javier of Estrada Street, Barangay Poblacion, Makati, allegedly spit on the three police officers, hitting one of them in the face, said PO2 Joel Delos Santos of the Makati Police.

The police officers, assigned to Police Community Precinct 9, were identified as PO1 Thomas Tacut, PO1 Romeo Penafior and Insp. Rosaura Balictar, the station's assistant commander.

Police said Javier had identified himself as a nurse assigned to Fort Bonifacio.

According to Delos Santos, the three officers apprehended Javier after he hit a security guard and a pedestrian while driving a motorcycle in Rockwell Tuesday night.

But when he was taken to precinct 9, Javier allegedly got angry at the police officers and began cursing them. Javier, who was said to be drunk, then spit on the authorities, hitting Tacut in the face and Penafior and Balictar in various parts of their bodies.

Stripped, the lawmen hauled Javier off to the Makati Police headquarters and filed an oral defamation complaint against the suspect.

Delos Santos said Javier had been taken to the Medical City Hospital for treatment of minor injuries he sustained in the motorcycle accident.

Delos Santos said it is up to the precinct 9 police officers if they want to be tested for any virus that they could have gotten from Javier's saliva.

AIRPORT General Manager Edgar Manda shows off the facility's new anti-SARS instrument—a Thermal Fever Sensing Device—in Malacñang. Manda said that the devices would help contain the spread of the deadly disease in the country.

By Christian Esguerra

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday tapped more than 30,000 barangay officers to help control the spread of the deadly Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) disease in Metro Manila.

Watchmen or "tanod" should assist health authorities in educating residents on the need to undergo precautionary measures such as voluntary quarantine, according to Ms Macapagal.

"The welfare of our nation rests upon the sense of duty of each and every citizen," she addressed a crowd of around 25,000 in Pasay City at the end of their crash course on police work and anti-terrorism measures.

"Let's appeal to those who feel they're at risk of having SARS to voluntarily quarantine themselves and seek assistance from health authorities."

Local leaders, she said, should explain that the quarantine of even an entire barangay would not necessarily mean that its residents are SARS carriers.

"We must take a sensible view of the situation," she said.

The Manila City government has already set up an isolation ward at the Ospital ng Maynila to treat possible SARS cases.

Manila Mayor Lito Atienza said that medical surveillance teams from the 44 health centers in the city and the four government hospitals, including the Ospital ng Maynila, have been deployed in all the communities.

In Makati, local officials said foreigners and overseas Filipino workers—especially those who have come from countries where SARS is widespread—would be closely watched for symptoms of the disease.

Makati Mayor Jejomar Binay has ordered hotels and lodging operators in the city to provide the city's health department with a list of guests from Asian countries where cases of SARS have broken out.

"While immigration and airport authorities have imposed strict screening measures on travelers from these countries, the city government is not about to take any chances," Binay said in a statement.

Earlier, Health Secretary Manuel Dayrit warned that the deadly disease could be brought home by overseas workers.

Police: Row over inheritance led to Koreans' abduction, killing

By Philip Tubeza and Leila Salaverria

THE KOREAN woman who was allegedly kidnapped on April 12 in Makati City is the daughter of a church caretaker killed in Parañaque last February, police said yesterday.

Investigators are also looking into the possibility that the mastermind of the murder of the Korean woman and the kidnapping of her daughter may be a Korean woman related to the victims.

"The (abducted) Korean woman allegedly went here to follow up the case of her murdered mother," a ranking Western Police District officer said yesterday. "So the killers and the kidnappers could be one and the same."

The Korean woman, Angelina Kim-Rabello, 38, was said to have been kidnapped after she received a sizeable inheritance, according to a Makati police officer.

Her mother, church caretaker Byung Rae Kim-Rabello, was found dead at around 11 p.m. on Feb. 17 at the entrance of the Korean Union Church at the Multi-national Village in Parañaque.

The police believe the elder Kim-Rabello was mauled to death in her room.

Investigators suspected security guard Vellaros Gambong as the culprit.

Gambong, 25, allegedly took Kim-Rabello's P20,000 salary and disappeared shortly after the killing.

"This is really an interesting case," said another Manila investigator.

Kim-Rabello, a resident of Valenzuela, is allegedly still in the hands of her four captors who abducted her and her two companions while they were in the A&W restaurant on Makati Avenue at around 7:30 p.m. on April 12.

Rabello's cousin, Juvelyn Sison, 24, and the latter's two-year-old son were released unharmed in Manila on April 20.

According to a Makati police source, the suspects had not called up Rabello's family and asked for money, which means the authorities cannot treat the incident as a kidnap-for-ransom case.

The source said that the Makati police are considering the Korean case as a missing person incident. Also, police have yet to establish the motive for the alleged abduction.

According to a Manila police source, Sison believed a Korean relative was behind the kidnapping. The Koreans allegedly are fighting among themselves over the inheritance.

The alleged mastermind reportedly lives in Matadero, Valenzuela, the source said.

But Sison was very reluctant to give information to the police.

"She is afraid of the kidnappers," the police officer said. "They threatened to kill her. She was very reluctant to give a statement and did not even want to file a complaint. So I told her that the police might suspect her if she did not file a complaint."

As of Wednesday morning, Sison has yet to return to the police.

Atienza wants trade blueprint drawn up in urban summit

By Jerome Aning

MANILA Mayor Lito Atienza yesterday said he is hoping to establish new trade and tourism ties with other local executives who are trooping to the capital for a summit this weekend.

The Urban Cities Summit, Atienza said, would allow the 47 participating mayors to share their experiences and forge a common development blueprint for business and tourism in their respective cities.

"The summit will enable us mayors to explore new links in our cities' business and tourism sectors," Atienza said. "This could result to the forging of exchange programs and new markets and business opportunities for everyone."

Atienza said that he hopes he and the other mayors can draw up "a coherent and workable blueprint" that can be used as a model for the cities' development efforts.

As summit host, Atienza also hopes to drive home his position that the key to the country's economic progress is to encourage development at the local level.

This, he said, would only be possible if there is genuine local autonomy, which is another of the mayor's favorite causes.

"The geographic nature of the Philippines as an archipelago dictates that development would have to be implemented at the local level, and that local government units must take the lead in the effort," he explained.

"Our experiences in the past decades showed that introducing development from the national level and in a centralized form isn't suitable for our country," Atienza said. "This model failed, and it would be fruitless and counterproductive to continue pursuing it."

The mayor said newly developed countries, such as China, achieved economic success that was anchored on local development.

Ping Lacson's 'hard sell'

THIS early, presidential aspirant Panfilo "Ping" Lacson is already campaigning. And he's employing what in sales is called "hard sell."

A hard sell is employed by salesmen who force prospective clients or customers to buy their products even if the prospects have no need for the products at the moment. Selling a memorial plot is an example of a hard sell.

Lacson is not rating in the surveys. Hard sell is his desperate attempt to endear himself to the voters.

One TV commercial shows Robina Gokongwei, daughter of multi-billionaire John Gokongwei, telling viewers that she was rescued by Lacson from her kidnappers.

For the record, it was not Lacson alone who rescued the Gokongweis' son from her kidnappers.

Robina failed to mention Chief Supt. Reynaldo Berruya, then a captain, who was Lacson's chief at the time. Then Lt. Panfilo Lacson was Berruya's deputy at the police intelligence branch of the Metrocom Security and Investigation Group (MISG).

Robina also failed to mention Lt. Col.

Rolly Abadilla, MISG chief, who worked painstakingly to find and rescue her.

Robina's rescue was a team effort at the MISG. Abadilla used the best brains and the best members of the MISG to crack the Robina kidnapping case.

Ping Lacson should be ashamed of himself for claiming sole credit for Robina's rescue. He was only part of the big picture in the rescue.

I should know. I was covering the MISG for the Times Journal when Robina was kidnapped and rescued by Colonel Rolando Abadilla and his men. The "men" included Lacson.

Let's grant that Lacson played a big part in the rescue of Robina Gokongwei.

But for every Robina Gokongwei, there are several Bubby Dacer skeletons in Ping Lacson's closets.

Bubby Dacer was a public relations practitioner who was kidnapped and mercilessly killed, along with his driver, by Lacson's men at the Presidential Anti-Organized Crime Task Force (PAOCTF).

A very important inmate at the National Bilibid Prisons, former Zamboanga del Sur Congressman Romeo Jalosjos, shot and wounded a fellow inmate, Marcos de Guzman, at the maximum security compound. De Guzman was shot in the leg.

But Macala denies Jalosjos shot De Guzman.

Macala gave a stupid reason: the bullet that hit De Guzman was stray.

If Macala's word is to be believed, nobody shot De Guzman intentionally. The bullet that hit De Guzman was fired from the gun of a person who didn't want to hurt anybody.

When veteran broadcaster Korina Sanchez asked Macala in a radio interview where the bullet that hit De Guzman came from, you know Macala's answer?

"Galing sa baril ang bala (The bullet came from a gun)," he said.

Por Dios, por santos! Would you expect that kind of answer from an intelligent person?

As Ms Sanchez told me later: "Either he's stupid or he's not interested in finding out who shot De Guzman."

I called up my sources at the National Bilibid Prisons and asked one of them the real story.

Here's what I gathered from an NBP insider:

Jalosjos is a bosyo (leader) of a gang of inmates at the maximum security. As a bosyo, he reigns supreme in his gang. His word is law.

But De Guzman tried to question his leadership by asking if he had the guts to kill people in as much as he was serving time for raping a young girl and not for murder.

This angered Jalosjos. He borrowed a gun from another inmate and shot De Guzman.

SUPREME COURT DOCTRINES

REMEDIAL LAW (CRIMINAL PROCEDURE)—Pre-trial order - Section 2 of Rule 118 of the Rules of Court states: "Sec. 2. Pre-trial agreement.—All agreements or admissions made or entered [into] during the pre-trial conference shall be reduced in writing and signed by the accused and counsel, otherwise, they cannot be used against the accused. The agreements covering the matters referred to in section 1 of this Rule shall be approved by the court." Based on the foregoing provision, for a pretrial agreement to be binding on the accused, it must satisfy the following conditions: (1) the agreement or admission must be in writing, and (2) it must be signed by both the accused and their counsel. The court's approval, mentioned in the last sentence of the above-quoted Section, is not needed to make the stipulations binding on the parties. Such approval is necessary merely to emphasize the supervision by the court over the case and to enable it to control the flow of the proceedings. Once the stipulations are reduced into writing and signed by the parties and their counsels, they become binding on the parties who made them. They become judicial admissions of the fact or facts stipulated. Even if placed at a disadvantageous position, a party may not be allowed to rescind them unilaterally; it must assume the consequences of the disadvantage. If the accused are allowed to plead guilty under appropriate circumstances, by parity of reasoning, they should likewise be allowed to enter into a fair and true pretrial agreement under appropriate circumstances. THE DAILY GOSPEL

Thursday, April 24, 2003
Octave of Easter

1st Reading: Acts 3:11-26
Gospel: Lk 24:35-48

The two disciples told what had happened on the road and how Jesus made himself known when he broke bread with them.

As they went on talking about this, Jesus himself stood in their midst. (And he said to them, "Peace to you.") In their panic and fright they thought they were seeing a ghost, but he said to them, "Why are you upset and why do such ideas cross your mind? Look at my hands and feet and see that it is I myself. Touch me and see for yourself that a ghost has no flesh and bones as I have." (As he said this, he showed his hands and feet.)

In their joy they didn't dare believe and were still astonished. So he said to them, "Have you anything to eat?" and they gave him a piece of broiled fish. He took it and ate it before them.

Then Jesus said to them, "Remember the words I spoke to you when I was still with you. Everything written about me in the Law of Moses, the Prophets and the Psalms had to be fulfilled." Then he opened their minds to understand the Scriptures.

And he went on, "You see what was written the Messiah had to suffer and on the third day rise from the dead. Then repentance and forgiveness in his name would be proclaimed to all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem. Now you shall be witnesses to this."

Commentary
The Jesus who appeared to the disciples was the same Jesus with whom they shared meals by the roadside, on the lakeshore, in caves, in friends' homes. With flesh and bones, still bearing the marks of the nails in his hands and feet, he ate a piece of what seemed to be a favorite (or the only food available) among friends, fish! But now what was hidden in his humanity was made manifest: Jesus fulfills Scriptures as the suffering and risen Messiah. In him forgiveness of sins is available to all. He has the power to send the promised Spirit. He is truly man but also truly God! The saving presence of the God-Man continues to be visible in the world, through the "witnesses of these things" the disciples. You.

Vicencio: I won't step down

VICENCIO

By Philip C. Tubeza

MALABON Mayor Amado Vicencio, who is facing another suspension from office, yesterday said that he would not step down and would fight the suspension order which he described as unjust.

Vicencio said that the Department of Interior and Local Government hearing officer who recommended the 60-day suspension has admitted that he made a mistake.

The mayor identified the DILG hearing officer as Arnel Mangando. He said Mangando had admitted to him that he forgot he gave the mayor 15 days to respond to a charge for grave abuse of authority.

The charge was filed by opposition councilors in connection with the purchase of a P88 million piece of property in Tanza, Navotas, during a hearing on March 25.

The property was intended as a relocation site for some 2,800 squatters who will be displaced by the Philippine National Railways Corporation's rehabilitation program.

The mayor said Mangando had recommended his suspension on April 4 after he "failed to present his side."

He said he submitted his response on April 8, which was within the set period, but Mangando had forgotten he gave the mayor 15 days to respond.

The recommendation somehow reached Malacañang and the Palace acted on the "erroneous order," Vicencio said.

Vicencio is asking the administration to review the suspension order after Mangando admitted his mistake. He also vowed that he would fight the order, adding his lawyers are thinking about filing charges against the persons who issued the suspension order.

Also yesterday, Malabon and the North Railway Development Project inter-agency committee inked a memorandum of agreement under which the Housing and Urban Development and Coordinating Council would assume control of the Tanza property.

The MOA also stipulated that the P12.5 million Malabon had given to Jun Jun Fishing Corp. as a downpayment would be returned to the city.

Vicencio said the MOA should put to rest all the accusations of gross negligence, dishonesty, and misconduct in office against him concerning the Tanza property.

Vicencio was also suspended last year for the controversial construction of a P122 million new city hall in Catmon, Malabon.

Court asked to junk suit vs oil firms

By Jerome Aning

CALTEX Philippines Inc. has asked a Manila Regional Trial Court to dismiss a lawsuit accusing the company, along with Shell Philippines and Petron Corp., of monopolizing the petroleum industry by unfair and concerted price hikes.

In a 14-page motion, Caltex lawyers Carlos Platon and Erwin Herrera said the complainant, Social Justice Society, should direct their accusations not to the court but to the Department of Energy-Department of Justice Joint Task Force.

The SJS is a small political party composed mostly of lawyers. The group sued the country's top three oil firms last March for increasing the prices of their petroleum products despite having purchased their inventory at a much lower cost, and whenever their competitors increase their prices.

Caltex said Republic Act No. 8479 or the Downstream Oil Industry Deregulation Act of 1998 tasks the DOE-DOJ Joint Task Force to investigate and determine if there is a "threatened, imminent or actual violation" of anti-cartel regulations.

The Caltex lawyers said that only if the results of the probe is positive could the task force direct government prosecutors to go to court and sue the violator.

They said that the same law tasks the DOE "to maintain a periodic schedule of present and future total industry inventory of petroleum products for the purpose of determining the level of supply."

Sometimes, it doesn't pay to laugh

By Leila B. Salaverria

FOR LAUGHING out loud, Arnel Pablo landed at the intensive care unit of a hospital after he was allegedly stabbed by businessman Alfred Yambot inside a Makati bar at dawn yesterday.

Police said Pablo, who was a regular at the Boogart Videoke

Bar on Evangelista Street in Makati, was friendly with the bar attendants. He was laughing at a funny remark that one of the attendants had made when Yambot and his two companions entered the bar at about 1 a.m. yesterday, said SPO4 Leonardo Timminan.

Yambot thought Pablo and the bar attendants were laugh ing at him and approached the group. Soon enough, Yambot and Pablo got into a fight.

Police said Yambot and one of his companions mauled Pablo.

Yambot also got hold of a knife and stabbed Pablo in the thigh, police said.

The suspect was about to stab Pablo again, but the bar attendants dragged the victim into a dressing room and out of Yambot's reach.

Police who came to the scene arrested Yambot, but his companions managed to escape. He is now detained at the Makati Police Headquarters, while Pablo is at the intensive care unit of the San Juan de Dios hospital.

Makati's one-way road scheme eased

By Leila B. Salaverria

MOTORISTS in Makati will now get a break from the sometimes confusing one-way street system being implemented in the city.

Makati Mayor Jejomar Binay yesterday said that he has approved a new traffic flow scheme which will allow two-way traffic flow on normally one-way streets.

The decision came after his meeting with members of the American Chambers of Commerce.

The new scheme takes effect this coming week-end.

Binay said some members of the AmCham noted that even with the light traffic in the central business district during week-ends and holidays, they still have to take a circuitous route because of the numerous one-way streets.

Under the new scheme, two-way traffic will be allowed on the following streets in Legazpi Village: all service roads of Dela Rosa Car Park 1-3; Sotto; Bolanos; Esteban, Ormaza, Rodriguez; Rada; Castro; Palanca; Gil; Nieva; Perea; Gallardo; Soria; Aguirre; Jimenez; Trasierra; and Salcedo (Gambao to Benavidez).

In Salcedo Village, the scheme will take effect in the following streets: all service roads of Valero Car Park 1-3; Gallardo; Lakandula; Bautista; Sanchez, Soliman, and Villar.

However, some streets will still be exempted from the scheme.

In Legazpi Village, one-way traffic will be maintained on the following streets: Amoroso; Amoroso Canaf; Adelantado; Dela Rosa; Salcedo (Dela Rosa to VA. Rufino); Legazpi; Gambao; VA. Rufino; and Benavidez.

In Salcedo Village, the exempted streets are: L.P. Levisse; VA. Rufino; Valero (VA. Rufino to Villar); and San Agustín.

Signs advising motorists about the new scheme will be put up at strategic locations.

No-bail bid vs Baladjay filed

By Alcuin Papa

THE QUEZON City Prosecutor's Office yesterday recommended no bail for Rosario Baladjay, the so-called "pyramid scam queen."

The no-bail bid was for three estafa cases filed against Balad jay, president of Multitel. The charges stemmed from a complaint filed against Baladjay by spouses Oliver and Maria Christina Amorin of Lovel Estate Developers Inc.

The couple claimed Baladjay convinced them to invest P15 million into Multitel.

Verder saga continues

THE SAGA of the Verder brothers, Lemuel (Christopher de Leon) and Waldo (Richard Gomez), continues as the GMA 7 telenovela, "Ang Ibigin ay Ikaw," reaches its climax and opens a new chapter this week.

Lanu Mercado plays the wife of Lemuel and Alice Dixon is the wife of Waldo. Book 1 closes with the death of their daughter Elmina (Karen de los Reyes) and the return of another long-lost daughter, Mariella (Angel Locsin).

SHOWTIME

Then Verder patriarch Donato (Armando Goyena) dies, and his burial brings together the feuding brothers, their wives and the other characters played by Barbara Perez, Boots Anson-Roa, Chibi del Rosario, Polo Ravales, Mark Gil, plus Armida Siguron Reyna and Imee Marcos.

Armida has a cameo role in the climax of Book 1, crossing over from the GMA 7 soap "Kung Mawawala Ka," where she plays the acting Philippine president. Imee continues her lawyer role in Book 2, aptly titled "Ang Ibigin ay Ikaw Pa Rin" and set in the corporate world, where the stakes are bigger and deadlier.

Book 2 opens with the disclosure of the patriarch's will, which pits Lemuel and Waldo against each other.

Directed by Joyce Bernal and Lore Reyes, "Ang Ibigin ay Ikaw Pa Rin" airs Mondays to Fridays after "Habang Kapi, ng Ka."

Karen wanted to be Donna Karan, Cindy Crawford or a singer

WHEN IT'S another bad news day, news reader Karen Davila's pleasant aura (on ABS-CBN's "Headlines," weekdays, 10:30 p.m.) on TV helps save the day. Karen doesn't come on too strong but neither is she just another pretty talking head. On her daily radio program, "Pasada Sa Is Trenta" (DZMM, 4:30-6 p.m., weekdays), she is always in control of the discussion.

How has motherhood changed you?

Motherhood has changed me completely. When David Joshua was born last year, one of my biggest fears was if I would be a good mother. My son is now 1 year and 2 months old and everyday with him is like being in a parenting class. I have become kinder, gentler, more patient and more playful. I've also learned love on another level—selfless, unconditional, without expectations. I'm extremely grateful that God has blessed me with a son. Oprah once said, "Motherhood is the most important role a woman could play." It's true. I'm now responsible for another person's life. It's a remarkable privilege and a destiny one should embrace.

How do you balance being a mom and a working girl at the same time, especially now that your son is in the formative years?

Anchoring "Headlines" nightly, I used to feel guilty not being able to lull my son to sleep. By the time I get home past midnight, David would be safely tucked in. My mom told me to value the moments I have with David when he is awake. Now that's quality time.

When I don't have a coverage for "The Correspondents," I am home with David. We read together, pray together, play building blocks, watch TV commercials (he loves them!), swim, walk, and go shopping.

I talk to my son all the time. I tell him I love him, a lot. And when it's a light day, I bring David to the radio booth. He's at home with the DZMM staff. I try not to bring work home.

What kind of a mother are you? Are you as driven as a mom as you are as a broadcast journalist?

Well, I have a vision of the mom I dream and pray of becoming. I want to be loving but firm. Having a baby isn't really the challenge, it's raising a child. I want to be the kind of parent who's there for my child, who will raise him in an environment that's loving and open, and most of all, train him in the ways of the Lord. I want my son to know Jesus personally.

I AM where I am because of God's grace, says Karen.

Would you give up your career to be a full-time mother?

If it means raising my child in a better way, I would. But I'm hoping I never have to make that choice. Just because a woman works doesn't make her a part-time mother. I am a full-time mother wherever I am. When I'm at work, David is always with a family member, either one of his grandparents.

Your husband DJ Sta. Ana is also working in the news and current affairs department of ABS-CBN. Don't you ever have clashes of opinions over certain news items? Where do you draw the line between work and the domestic front?

My husband is the news director, and fortunately, I don't work directly under him. I produce for "The Correspondents," a current affairs program. For the past eight years of my broadcasting career, I've worked for an investigative magazine program, which I enjoy. When DJ comes home, we hardly talk about work. Our jobs are stressful enough, so when we're home, we try to lighten things up.

If there's one moment in history you wished you witnessed, what would it be?

I wish I covered Baghdad.

Who are the personalities you dream to interview?

Dr. Carlo Urbani, who discovered SARS. He's dead.

Any favorite interview subject?

Analisa, the laundrywoman dreaming of becoming a Japayuki. She was a major case study for an episode I did for "The Correspondents," "Ang Bagong Mukha ng Japayuki." She dreams of becoming a singer in Japan but she can't hit one note right. But what I like about her is her determination and her will. It came out in the interview. She didn't blink, wasn't ashamed of who she is, and spoke her heart and mind very clearly.

Growing up, were you watching the news already?

Are you kidding? I wanted to be Donna Karan, the fashion designer, or Cindy Crawford but I accepted I was too short. The first news people I watched were Cheche Lazaro and Loren Legarda. I was in second year college in UP.

How would you rate news reporting Pinoy style?

Good news reporting is universal. Accurate, balanced, factual. But good reporting also involves interpreting the news and helping people understand the story. I think that's what we all need. A deeper perspective on issues, not just reporting the day to day events but being able to report about the consequences and effects of a certain event. Then we not only inform but also educate the viewer.

Sensational reporting is not good reporting. But remember, it doesn't mean the alternative is bland reporting. There's a way to attract the viewer's attention, like getting the hook of a story.

What's the most important lesson you've learned in your career?

I'm a broadcast journalist because I know I can make a difference. It's a calling. Each time I do a story and people react, I am happy. When I go on radio each day, and I am able to reach and inform listeners about issues that affect them, I'm fulfilled. I also know I'm where I am because of God's grace and his goodness.

Any role models?

Cheche Lazaro for her grace, kindness and unquestionable integrity. My mother, for her faith, perseverance and resilience. My sister, for her love for the Lord. Hillary Clinton, for her strength and intelligence.

Perverted search for truth and justice

"PHONE Booth" has a deceptive beginning: its opening credits sequence looks like the start of a fluffy romantic comedy, like "Pillow Talk."

Then, the mood of the opening visuals changes, and it seems like we're in for a high-tech James Bond-type thriller, with shots of a communications satellite in outer space, intricate phone systems, etc.

Finally, the film settles down to the business at hand, and it turns out to be none of the above, but a one-on-one confrontation with a perverse twist.

Ok, but we wish that director Joel Schumacher didn't opt for that misleading opening, and concentrated on telling his story without those baffling stylistic red herrings.

So, what's "Phone Booth" really about? Try this on for size: Colin Farrell plays a coldblooded publicist—whose whole life is an elaborate, flamboyant lie—until he gets into a phone booth where he is ordered to stay put by a mysterious caller. If he leaves, or doesn't confess his "sins" to his wife, the caller will shoot him dead!

What's going on here? Is the unseen caller merely a wacko, or is he a modern-day version of God who can be terribly cruel in his search for truth and justice?

At first, the heavily symbolic reverberations hold sway, and the publicist's cool facade crumbles in the face of such an Old Testament display of righteous anger.

In time, however, the caller ceases to be relentlessly principled and turns erratic and cruelly whimsical, changing the rules of the "game" whenever he pleases. So, he's a wacko, after all.

If so, why is he so hellbent on upholding the moral order in today's cynically immoral and amoral world? We're informed that this isn't the first time that he's threatened to execute a "sinner." Why has he become such an uncompromising serial avenger?

As we watch the film, we ponder on this question despite the paucity of solid leads or real answers. After the rules start to change, however, we feel like we're being taken for a subjective ride by either the mystery caller or the director—or both!

So, we stop trying to make integral sense of what we're seeing, and react to each sequence as it comes.

VIEWFINDER

Nestor U. Torre

Taken as such, Schumacher's movie is divertingly eventful. Farrell's raw and nervy performance makes the protagonist's baffling predicament provocative and empathetic.

But some non sequiturs intrude. Much is made of a gun that the caller has hidden in the booth to implicate the publicist in a pimp's death, but when push comes to shove, the gun turns out to be an unproductive plot device.

The "confrontation" between the two women in the publicist's life is similarly undeveloped. And the responding cops are woefully inept, allowing the caller to do his worst, with unpunished impunity.

"Phone Booth" is sort of reminiscent of another movie about a standoff involving cops, "Dog Day Afternoon." But that Al Pacino starrer handled its material better, and had much more cogent things to say about guilt, the law, morality, the cops, and mob mentality.

Big surprises

ROWAN Atkinson's latest starrer, "Johnny English," has some big surprises up its sleeve. First, the acclaimed actor, John Malkovich, plays an evil Frenchman, complete with really thick French accent. What fun!

Next, singer Natalie Imbruglia makes a smashing film debut as a special agent. She does so well in the comedy that she should be getting more film offers soon!

Cogie gets high playing dead in new movie

By Remy M. Umerez
Contributor

COGIE Domingo, the sensitive young actor of "Deathrow" and the TV soap "Kung Mawawala Ka" who continues to be hounded by drug rumors, is playing a dead man in his new movie.

The movie, "Anghel sa Lupa," directed by Jose Javier Reyes, has been in the can since last year. Cogie says it is one of his three best movies so far.

Cogie plays the title role in "Anghel sa Lupa" as widow Dina Bonnaville's son whose soul remains earth-bound and continues to touch the lives of those he loves.

"I am a dead man here," Cogie said of his role in the movie. "How many times could I play such a role in my career? This could be the first and the last, and I am grateful to Direk Joey Reyes for choosing me for the part. I am touched when a person shows how much faith he has in me and in my acting. The gesture inspires me a lot."

Despite being touched by the director's trust in him, however, Cogie admitted he couldn't recall the name of his character in the new movie

Beyond his years

The story of "Anghel sa Lupa" recalls the plots of foreign films like "Ghost," "Heaven Can Wait" and even "The Others." It is also about sibling rivalry and a mother's enduring love.

People who have watched the advance screening of "Anghel sa Lupa" said Cogie's acting depth is far beyond his years.

"Anghel sa Lupa" also stars Maxene Magalona as Cogie's love interest and Alwyn Uyico as his guilt-haunted younger brother. Child actor Jiro Manio and Paolo Ballesteros also play pivotal parts in this story of love and death.

Cogie may have also forgotten the less than a dozen movies he has made in the past four years, but his followers can cite at least two where he shone as an actor.

Dedicated

There is "Yakapin Mo ang Umaga," where he played the troubled, drug-addicted son of Christopher de Leon and Lorna Tolentino.

Listen to Director Reyes, who also directed that earlier movie, heaping hosanna on Cogie for his fine acting. "Kapag nalutasan mo ang kagalingan nina Boyet at Lorna sa pag-arte eh nagiging ka rin kanilad nila," Reyes said. "Cogie is a dedicated young man who easily absorbs the emotions the situation or story requires."

And there is "Deathrow," directed by Joel Lamangan. In this depressing tale of death convicts, Cogie found himself pitting acting skills with tried, tested and revered old-timers led by Eddie Garcia.

Cogie has also had his share of flops, such as the heavily promoted "Cool Dudes" and "Paksa Mo Lang."

On TV, he is seen in a different light in the widely-watched light drama "Kung Mawawala Ka," where he plays Carlitos Valiente, son of Vic Vargas and Marianne de la Riva (who has been killed in a past episode). Cogie's role has a touch of villainy, which he says he likes.

Accusations

It was after "Yakapin Mo ang Umaga" that the drug rumor about him started circulating, probably sparked by his role as an addict.

Asked about the drug rumor, Cogie snapped, "What kind of rumor is that?"

The young actor has also been accused of unprofessionalism, such as being often late, very late, for appointments and for work. Asked about this, Cogie said he has sorted out his schedule just so his work load would be lighter, and he has even given up some projects.

Since this is show biz, the rumors can also be an indication of the young man's popularity. He expects his name to be dragged into more rumors. How will Cogie cope with it?

Very simple," he replied. "Kapag totoo, tatakbahan ko na lang (I'll just run away)." And then the fine young actor laughed.

COOL DUDE. Cogie Domingo has been described as a fine, sensitive actor.

Pension pun

PRICES of bluechip stocks went up lately. A number of them, in fact, posted a five-time increase of up to 30 percent. To top it all, the run-up happened in just a few days.

And so I asked around if the SSS and the GSIS got into the market, as I have been egging them, so our money in those two pension funds would earn a lot.

No, they did not. They still think that, as an investment policy of the most brilliant kind, investing in the stock market is just too "hard."

I am not kidding. That's what the top guys in those two money suckers say, if you ask them for the reason they are not in the market at all. It is hard!

BUT that is what we hire all those highly paid "fund managers" for, isn't it? They have to do what is hard. Otherwise, we should have just hired some bubble gums.

I have no pun this time—our two beloved pension funds should manage our own hard-earned money for our own minuscule pension for our own unclear future.

As of this writing, both are still the only pension funds in the whole wide world that do not bother with the stock market at all.

They continue to put all their billions on no-brainer T-bills. As my Apogee Oning used to tell my father, "even a secondhand bubble gum can invest in T-bills."

INVESTING in the stock market is not for everybody precisely because it requires brains. Also, a lot of experience in fund management cannot hurt.

Look, you don't get a dog to get rid of the house mice, and you don't hire a beauty queen to take care of your finances. Unless you have something else in mind!

But I was just saying, among the issues which moved up by more than 30 percent lately were Ayala Land, Globe, PLDT and SM Prime. Good companies all!

Ask any moron in the market: he'll tell you you just buy those issues without looking when the prices go dirt cheap, just because you have so much idle money.

BREAKTIME

Conrado R. Banal III

AND so when the stock market jumps up, just as it did the last time, when it became clear that the Iraq war was ending, you either make the stocks into pickles or sell them for a profit.

If you do the latter the very next day, you can send your girlfriend shopping to Hong Kong. Alon! She is getting to be pretty high-maintenance, that b...h!

Anyway, under their charters, the SSS and the GSIS have to make our money earn by so many percent every year. I wonder if they are even anywhere near the minimum. With the no-brainer T-bills, I will not be surprised if they are even negative.

YOU see, during the time of Carlos Arellano at the SSS, who handled billions of trust funds in the Far East Bank, the pension fund recorded its highest income EVER.

That was more than P30 billion, mainly from stock investments, even considering the "paper" loss by the time Arellano left.

Now, using hindsight, certain SSS executives are saying that, because of Arellano's adventure into stocks, the fund is carrying billions of "paper" loss.

It's because the stock prices collapsed after Arellano's time. The question is, what did the SSS do in such a downturn? It did a lot of nothing.

HINDSIGHT also tells me that, had the SSS and the GSIS stayed active in the market, they could have unloaded some of their holdings before the market turned sour.

But in the stock market, they are even saying that the stock market went bad precisely because the SSS and the GSIS, all of a sudden, just fell into a deep coma.

The two pension funds, based on their investible funds, could maintain something like P100 billion of investments in stocks at any one time—easily.

Just imagine what kind of action those two pension funds could have created in the market! It would have been more frenzied than Jackie Chan's sequence while on amphetamine.

AND to cover up their own ineptitude, today, certain executives of the pension funds keep harping on the investment in PCI-Equitable Bank.

As you know, during the time of the man named Band ... Wrist Band ... the SSS and the GSIS took part in Equitable Bank's acquisition of PCI Bank from the Lopez group.

They bought control of PCI Bank at P290 per share. Again, that was the "controlling" stake in one of the biggest banks in the country at that time.

The book value of PCI Bank was P160 per share. Some groups shouted, and are still shouting, "overpriced."

Some morons really just cannot tell the difference between premium and overpricing.

IN every acquisition of a huge block of shares in any bank, you talk of a premium. It is the price you pay above the book value, say, for getting a huge number of shares.

In the case of the PCI Bank-Equitable Bank deal, the premium was roughly 50 percent of book value. That was cheap.

In comparison, the Ayala group's BPI bought Far East Bank for a 150-percent premium. The book value of Far East Bank was P20 billion. BPI paid P30 billion for it.

Perhaps, the usually astute JAZA was off that day the Ayala group bought Far East Bank. Or maybe Xavier Loinaz was not his usual brilliant self that day.

So the Ayala group was so stupid, it agreed to a 150-percent "overprice." You know—about two and a half times more stupid than the SSS and the GSIS.

TODAY, both the SSS and the GSIS are afraid of doing a Chuckie Arellano. They are afraid of investing in the stock market.

They think it is better for our money to earn a little from the T-bills, without any risk, than for it to earn much more, but with a lot of risks.

But that's why we want fund managers to take care of our money. They should know what to do, so the money can earn a lot. They should know, for starters, how to manage their own fear.

FEAR, I guess, is the evil in business today. For instance, the Bangko Sentral has documents about some hanky-panky in Banco Filipino.

Yet the Bangko Sentral, I heard, could not do anything against the bank, despite all those documents, for fear of what the bank can do with the help of the courts.

You see, Banco Filipino has won its long fought case against the defunct Central Bank. Today, nobody in Bangko Sentral dares touch anything to do with the bank again.

Word goes around, too, that BSP Deputy Governor Alberto Reyes was even fined by the courts in connection with the closed Urban Bank case. That kind of fear factor!

The only thing we are not afraid of is the SARS virus.

AND so now I share with you this letter from a certain Lina Santiago of Makati. She writes:

"It was announced by CNN that Malaysia would not allow entry or grant visas to anyone coming in from China except businessmen who had prior health clearance."

"Why is it that Malaysia can take big bold steps, be it with regards their currency or public health? Will we have more to gain or to lose by allowing tourists from the hot spot itself of SARS to come and invade us? That is what they will actually be doing, since anyone of them could be potential carriers of the virus."

"Will allowing people from China to come in give us such large fortune to offset any outbreak, much more an epidemic within our midst? Will our tourism officials be ready to care for SARS victims themselves, just the simple caregiver's task of feeding, changing and cleaning the patients? Does anybody have any idea on the amount of money that will be needed to cope with an outbreak? Can our politicians start dipping into their pork barrel right now to buy the equipment to prepare the country for a possible outbreak? Why was Joe de Venecia asked by his peers to go for voluntary quarantine at the same time, tourists were allowed in to mingle with the rest of us?"

Gov't threatens to withdraw bill on vehicle excise tax

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

THE BOARD of Investments yesterday warned that the government would withdraw a bill amending the excise taxes on vehicles if it does not get the green light from the Senate next month.

BOI Managing Head Gregory L. Domingo said another delay in the enactment of the bill would mean that there was "something fundamentally flawed" about the plan to abolish the tax exemptions granted 10-seater vehicles and shift the excise tax base from engine size to value. The House of Representatives approved the bill before Congress went into recess last month while the Senate, where the bill faced rough sailing, agreed to resume deliberations this month.

Domingo said the government would have no choice but to take back the bill and review possible changes before trying its luck again in Congress. In the meantime, assemblers would have to pay the excise taxes under Revenue Regulation 4-2003, which the Bureau of Internal Revenues plans to implement by May 19.

The dreaded RR 4-2003 tightens the implementation of the tax exemption on 10-seater vehicles and will lead to an inevitable price increase of 70 percent on all vehicles sold in the market, including the best-selling Asian utility vehicles.

Domingo said the BOI has decided to push an export subsidy package for exporters of completely built up vehicles in Congress that would give assemblers up to a 50 percent cut in their excise taxes on domestic sales.

Domingo said this was better than giving assemblers a fixed subsidy of between $200 and $400 per unit shipped. He said an excise tax discount would encourage assemblers to export more because it would mean more profits from their domestic sales. "The tax discount favors big local assemblers because they would get potentially bigger incentives from their exports," Domingo said.

The reforms in automotive excise taxes and the export incentive package are part of the President's mandate to reinvigorate the Motor Vehicle Development Program and boost domestic and export sales to between 250,000 and 300,000 units by 2006.

BIR bucks extension of tax perks to BOI-listed firms

By Michelle V. Remo

THE BUREAU of Internal Revenue is against the proposed plan of the Board of Investments to grant BOI-registered enterprises another year of income tax exemption.

The BIR said granting the request of power producers, infrastructure builders and service providers to extend their tax break would significantly affect the bureau's revenue collection efforts.

According to lawyer Nelson Aspe, chief of staff of the BIR's deputy commissioner's office, the BIR would not support the move to extend the tax holiday for these firms if ever Congress would seek its comment on the matter.

"It has always been the stance of the BIR to say no to extensions of tax breaks since it directly affects our efforts to improve tax collection," he said in an interview.

Aspe said the BIR understands that tax breaks are essential instruments to improve investments and the business climate as a whole, but that extending such privileges should be carefully studied.

"We understand that revenue collection would also suffer a decline if there would be a less number of businesses that operate in the country. But if asked to give our side on the issue, we would go against the extension of tax privileges of companies who have already enjoyed them," he said.

Aspe said granting exemption to these business enterprises could be unfair to those who have long been paying taxes to the government and who have not yet enjoyed such privileges.

The BOI plan is aimed at attracting more investments into the country, which has suffered from negative perception of its economic climate and from China's absorption of majority of investments in Asia.

Prepaid Internet users still outnumber postpaid surfers

By Abigail L. Ho

PREPAID Internet users continue to outnumber postpaid subscribers, according to one of the country's pioneer Internet service providers.

"There has been a drastic (shift) to prepaid Internet over the years," Mosaic Communications Inc. senior vice president Robertson Chiang said.

Chiang disclosed that MosCom, one of the country's largest ISPs, now had an almost equal mix of postpaid and prepaid subscribers. The company previously catered only to the postpaid market.

On average, MosCom sells around 20,000 to 30,000 prepaid Internet cards a month, according to Chiang.

He explained that the shift was a function of economic and convenience issues.

With a postpaid Internet account, a subscriber will have to show all sorts of documents to be able to open an account. A fixed bill will also have to be settled on a monthly basis.

Prepaid Internet cards, on the other hand, can be bought in almost any store at a user's convenience.

But the proliferation of prepaid Internet cards had made competition in the local ISP arena even tougher, Chiang said.

Gov't seen going back to global capital market in 2nd semester

By Doris C. Dumlaog

THE COUNTRY is planning to tap the global debt market anew by the second half of this year to meet part of the $900-million funding requirement that the government intends to obtain from commercial sources.

In a teleconference with international investors yesterday, Finance Secretary Jose Isidro Camacho said the government would wait until the second semester before braving the debt markets again.

CAMACHO

The foremost concern, he said, was to clear the way for the planned debt issue of the state-owned National Power Corp. The power company is raising a total of $1.2 billion this year for its budgetary requirements.

"The national government is staying on the sidelines while the Bangko Sentral is waiting for the right timing," Camacho said.

The government needs to resort to more borrowings to finance its projected budget deficit this year of P202 billion. In the first three months of the year, the government's budget shortfall reached P58.9 billion, exceeded the target ceiling for the period of P55.2 billion. For March, alone, the deficit was placed at P27.2 billion.

In the first quarter, the government's net financing declined by 51 percent to P48.7 billion as the Bureau of Treasury rejected high bid rates for treasury bills and bonds as well as in the net redemption of local treasury bonds.

The government also issued a total of $800 million worth of global bonds and eurobonds in January and February this year.

Local firms still cold on foreign borrowings

THE UNCERTAINTIES brought about by the war in Iraq may have already waned but Philippine companies have yet to regain the appetite to tap the capital markets, according to the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas.

In an interview, BSP managing director for research Diwa Guinigundo said most local issuers were still wary of the global financial environment even if the risks from the war in Iraq have already gone down substantially. Philippine companies are required to seek approval from the BSP's Monetary Board prior to any foreign borrowing.

"The war is over but it takes time for everybody to settle down," Guinigundo said.

Asked about new applications for foreign borrowings from local firms, he said: "I don't have the numbers but we are still feeling the wait-and-see attitude of local borrowers."

Although solution to the Iraqi crisis appeared to be on the horizon, Guinigundo said a lot of uncertainties remained.

"The issue of reconstruction is always there. What is it going to cost the US economy to finance the reconstruction?" he said. "Does this mean that the US Federal government will incur a higher deficit? What will happen to interest rates?" If US interest rates tightened, the BSP official said it would be inevitable for local interest rates to rise as well.

"If you don't increase local interest rates, there will be capital outflows," Guinigundo said.

than the target of P55.2 billion.

But some analysts said the bigger shortfall was not a surprise after the government had hinted about an overshoot due to front-loading of some expenditures.

Despite the fears about a possible sovereign downgrade, the debt market largely ignored the first-quarter deficit numbers as yields eased slightly.

Dominant phone firm Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. (PLDT) led the losers, falling P5 to P390. It accounted for about a quarter of the total turnover.

PLDT rival Digital Telecommunications Inc. slid two centavos to 72 centavos, extending its losses to a second day. But the stock is still up 38 percent since the start of the month on speculation about its recent entry into the competitive mobile phone business.

IS it necessary or correct to rev the engine before turning it off? —John Paul Segueria from Cagayan De Oro City

No, it is neither necessary nor correct. When you rev the engine you introduce a fresh charge of gasoline and air into the engine. When the motor stops, you end up dumping raw fuel on the cylinder walls and rings, washing away the lubricating oil. When you next start the car, you contribute to engine wear because there is no oil protection so the piston rings wear heavily on the cylinder walls.

On top of that, you waste gasoline because you're shooting raw gas through the system which will not be burnt. So when it's time to stop, just stop. Take your foot off the gas completely for at least a few seconds before turning off the key.

And while we're on the subject of revving engines, it is also not a good idea to rev your engine when you start it. Fifty percent of all engine wear occurs in the first few seconds after you start the car. By accelerating before the oil reaches the top of the engine cylinders, you speed up engine wear and can do a considerable amount of damage. Instead of idling for several minutes or revving your engine on a cold start, just drive gently for the first kilometer or two, or for about five minutes. Believe it or not, it takes more time to warm up the engine when it's sitting idle. So to get your car warmed up right, just start the engine and drive.

two successful seasons. In 2000, the Swede was CART Rookie of the Year, and he went on to win four times and lead the championship for much of the season before finishing second in the final standings.

Fernandez Racing, now teamed with former Formula One racer Aguri Suzuki, will field Atlantic Championship oval race winner Roger Yasukawa's Panasonic/Arta Dailara with Honda power under the Super Aguri Fernandez Racing banner in the 2003 IRL IndyCar Series.

Last year, Yasukawa won in just his second Atlantic start at the historic Milwaukee Mile oval and finished second at the only other Atlantic oval race, at Chicago Motor Speedway. Of Japanese heritage, but born in California where he lives today, Yasukawa finished 10th in the Atlantic championship despite missing three rounds of the 12-race series.

Honda's racing subsidiary, Honda Performance Development Inc.

of Santa Clarita, California, will lead the company's effort in the IRL IndyCar Series, in partnership with Ilmor Engineering Inc., of Plymouth, Michigan. HPD and Ilmor will work together as technical partners to design, develop and produce engines for the 2003 season. HPD and Ilmor also will provide backside support and engine rebuilding services to teams using the newly developed Honda H13R Indy V-8 engine.

Thus is an exciting new chapter in Honda's racing history, giving Honda the opportunity to compete in the challenging IRL series and the famous Indianapolis 500 race, while at the same time expanding HPD's abilities as a true racing engine development company, said Robert Clarke, general manager of HPD. Competing in the IRL series, with its rules to intentionally limit the use of high-cost technology and thus provide more parity in the racing field, will give Honda a new competitive experience and the fans more exciting racing.

A lion's racing pedigree

ON THE ROAD

Aida Sevilla-Mendoza

"UN peu" in French means "a little," but when it comes to Peugeot, the word means anything but little. Peugeot is a lion, both in the automobile industry and in international motor sports. The founding Peugeot family's forefathers must have been inspired in 1858 when they registered the company's trademark as a lion striding along an arrow to symbolize the durability, suppleness and quickness of steel, like the lion itself.

Today, Automobiles Peugeot is part of the PSA Group, the sixth largest car maker in the world with sales of more than 3.2 million vehicles in 2002. Car buffs are anticipating Peugeot's arrival in Manila this June since the first car that Peugeot distributor AutoFrance Philippines Inc. will bring in is the standard version of the World Rally Championship-winning Peugeot 206.

The Peugeot 206 World Rally Car was first shown to the public in 1998 alongside the Peugeot 206 standard production car. In the four years since its launch, over three million units of the 206 have been sold. In 2002, it was Europe's best-selling car.

World Rally champion

The success of the 206 may be traced to the 206 World Rally Car's victories three years in a row (2000, 2001 and 2002) in the World Rally Championship (WRC), which consists of 14 racing events on asphalt, gravel and snow in as many countries from January to November. The latest WRC news is that two Peugeot 206 WRC Evo 3 entries swept first and second place in the Rally New Zealand (April 11-13), boosting Peugeot's lead to 49 points. Citroen is second with 44 and Ford is third with 26 points. (Citroen, by the way, is a sister company in the PSA Group, 90 percent of its equity having been acquired by Peugeot in 1976 when it was cash-strapped.)

But the WRC is not the only recurring tide in the lion's racing pedigree. The history of Peugeot is replete with triumphs in motor sports. In 1912, Peugeot produced its first Grand Prix car powered by an engine that was technologically advanced for its time, using a hemispherical combustion chamber with cross-flow head and 4 valves per cylinder driven by twin overhead camshafts. The 16-valve, DOHC Peugeot won the Grand Prix for French Automobiles and a year later, placed first in the Indianapolis American Grand Prix. A reinforced variant broke the world speed record in 1913 by clocking 170.558 km per hour.

In 1931, a Peugeot 201 won the Monte Carlo Rally and in 1938, a Peugeot 402 finished No. 1 in the 24 Hours of Le Mans race. After World War II forced Peugeot to stay inactive for some years, the car maker trumpeted its return to motor sports in 1961 by winning the East African Safari Rally with its new 404 model. Another rally winner, the 504, came out in 1968, elevating Peugeot's sales as France's second best-selling car.

Headlines again

After a quiet interlude lasting about a decade, Peugeot made industry headlines again in 1983 when it launched the 205 hatchback on the market with great success. What's more, the 205's racing version, the 205 Turbo 16, captured the world rally championship in 1985 and the Paris-Dakar endurance rally in 1987. Aside from these victories and the WRC manufacturer titles, Peugeot has also won at Pikes' Peak.

Peugeot is the only major car company other than Ford that is still run by members of the founding family. In Europe, the PSA Group to which Peugeot belongs outsells all but the Volkswagen Group and in the United Kingdom, it is the No. 2 manufacturer, second to Ford. Although it remains largely centered in Western Europe and has no immediate plans to re-enter the lucrative United States market, Peugeot claims that its sales in Latin America, Central and Eastern Europe, Iran and Japan rose by 21 percent last year. Peugeot is returning to the Philippines after an absence of 40 years as part of its Asian marketing strategy, but its regional base will be in Malaysia.

The Peugeot 206 to be sold here will be a 1.6-liter hatchback, not the turbo-charged, 4-wheel-drive rally car that has become a world motor sports champion. Nonetheless, because of Peugeot's racing pedigree and platform-sharing program, the 206 is expected to be a high-performance but reasonably priced subcompact.

THE "Best of Show" winner: the 1967 Toyota Corona Toyopet entry of Xtreme Auto Center

Trans Sport Show 2003 major winners known

THE RECENTLY concluded Trans Sport Show 2003 was again a resounding success, despite the bearish economy, the conflict in Iraq and the SARS epidemic. The country's biggest motoring event brought together all the local car enthusiasts to witness the latest in the local motoring scene.

The hotly contested Trans Sport Show Cup open class car competition was hotly contested in several categories requiring last minute deliberations by the show judges to determine the eventual winners.

For the highly coveted "Best of Show" award, the rare of 1967 Toyota Corona Toyopet entry of Xtreme Auto Center was declared the winner. Painted in frost silver with beautiful matching maroon interior, the car is in better than "showroom" condition. The Corona was also judged the "Best Interior" and also first in the "Vintage Stock" category, besting the 1968 Mercedes-Benz 280SL entry of Route 66.

Another surprise winner is the much modified 2002 Honda Civic of A-Toy Custom Paint which won the tough Japanese Modified 2 category in a closely contested match against the 2001 Honda Civic entry of Auto Exclusive Paint & Body Works. The car of A-Toy was also voted as the 1st runner-up for the "Best of Show" award and the top placer in the "Best Body Kit" category.

The "Best in Paint" category was won by the 1989 Mercedes Benz 260E Lorinser entry of DC Autosport for the Euro-American Division and the 1996 Honda S1R of Allen Isidro/Racing Zone won the Japanese Division. Best Engine Display was garnered by the 2001 Honda Civic of Reiber Autoshape. The "Best

THE 1997 Nissan Cefiro entry of Paint Tricks Auto Body won the "Best Japanese Luxury Sedan" category.

THE 1955 Chevy Bel Air entry of Boy de Leon was the winner of the "Best Historic Sedan."

Audio Setup" went to the 1994 Honda Civic of Vicente Peña.

This year's Ms Trans Sport Show winner is Michelle Moreno representing the company of Westfield Megabird owned by car racer Trevor Briggs. Moreno bested 11 other contestants who are all representatives of other exhibitor companies.

On the exhibitor's side, Mancor Industries won the "Most Outstanding Corporate Display" award. The company exhibited a typical Motor Vehicle Inspection System (MVIS) from Germany which the Mancor will set up soon in line with the government's implementation of a stringent MVIS starting next year.

When heart becomes rock; new LRT pitch

IT was not just the day the music died. For the Schumacher brothers (Michael and Ralf), it was more than that: It was the day their mother died.

I raise a glass to them for their courage to go for the near-impossible amid adversity. To humanity, a mother's death is the mother of all grief.

It was not so much that Michael Schumacher finally snapped his losing streak last Sunday in the Formula One season. His victory in the San Marino Grand Prix in Imola, Italy, spoke volumes about how not to lose when defeat looked as inevitable as death.

How can one score a victory when one's world was supposed to be enveloped in darkness? God's eyes were Schumacher's eyes that day?

Mother's hand was behind the steering wheel of her son's machine that day?

The greatest Formula One driver for years now was with his mother just a day before the victory.

Seemingly, Schumi has made traveling a breeze, making the world a virtual plaything.

On Saturday, minutes after topping the qualifying run in the San Marino Grand Prix, the Ferrari driver flew with his brother Ralf to Cologne, Germany, for a brief, final visit to their ailing 55-year-old mother. By nightfall, the brothers were back in Italy, ready to do battle the next day.

Talk about willpower, or a heart as hard as a rock. I say not many Filipinos are known for that.

When the Schumacher brothers learned of their mother's death last Sunday morning, the day of the race, they closed their eyes, paused a while and said a prayer. And then, without any hint of hesitation, they boarded their machines for the San Marino Grand Prix.

In a little more than an hour later, Michael Schumacher, 32, was the winner. Like his brother Ralf, Michael won a more meaningful battle than the one achieved at the racetrack: The battle raging in their minds—mother's death.

To be sure, there was drama other than the gnawing thought about how the Schumachers would survive the ordeal.

Starting from the grid first, Michael was overtaken by Ralf on the race's first turn. If you think that that was for show, think again, fellas.

After 16 of the 62 laps scheduled for the day, Ralf had to make a pit stop and surrendered the lead to his elder brother. The defending world champion led most of the way thereafter en route to pocketing his first victory for the season. Ralf finished fourth in a Williams.

In a statement after his victory, Michael said: "My mother loved to be at the track. She loved it when we drove go-karts on the old track at home. She would have wanted to see us race today."

FULL TANK

Maybe, those were in his thoughts too during the 1 hour, 23 minutes and 12.058 seconds that he negotiated the 305.609-km layout in winning the San Marino Grand Prix.

What an animal, this Schumi. Added the German: "Today everyone in the team, and I really say everyone, from the president to the engineers to the technicians to the mechanics to the cooks, everyone gave me great support."

Recent reports show a neck and neck competition between the "moving" Strada 4x4 and the new Isuzu Fuego 4x4 insofar as the pickup market is concerned. I'm not surprised. For years in the running, both auto giants have been known to exhibit a strong showing in that category.

But in the AUV market, Toyota has inched "a little ahead" again with its new Revo VX200. Before that, the Crosswind has been lording it over together with Mitsubishi's Adventure and, surely, the entry of the new Revo VX200 will trigger another round of stiff, nay friendly, competitions among the three.

So, who said the automotive industry is still in the pits? Can't you see that new models are being rolled out like dice in a casino?

Do you know that last year, there was an average of 293,000 passengers per day at the Light Rail Transit Line 1, giving the government revenues worth P1.5 billion?

This is now the reason the government, through Assistant Secretary Robert Castañares of the Department of Transportation and Communications, intends to implement shortly a $210-million capacity build-up project to generate an additional 67,000 passengers per direction per hour. The project intends to buy 12 new air-conditioned, four-car trains, with the existing trains to be upgraded.

Congratulations to Mitsubishi (hey, Mr. Arlan Reyes, have you asked permission already from Mr. Mei Dixon about our supposed beer session on or before May 1?) for already having submitted the break through proposal that is currently undergoing review.

BUSINESS

Business forms anti-graft foundation

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

BUSINESS groups led by the Chamber of Real Estate and Builders' Associations Inc. and Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry have formed an anti-corruption foundation that would seek to prevent and prosecute corrupt practices in the country.

In a news statement, Creba council of leaders chair Jaime Cura announced that Creba, the PCCL and at least nine other business groups decided to form the Business Against Graft and Corruption Inc., or Bagcor, because corruption had grown to "ominous proportion."

"It has become so ingrained in our culture that graft and corruption has become SOP (standard operating procedure) in all government and private transactions," Cura said

He said as a foundation registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission, Bagcor would deploy its own "agents" who would help in reviewing the government bureaucratic system to pinpoint the most common areas where corruption occurred, such as procurement and licensing.

Cura said Bagcor's agents would also be deployed to help prosecute corrupt government and private individuals through entrapments and by providing testimonies in their arraignment.

He said these agents would be deputized by the Office of the Ombudsman in its fight against this growing scourge of the country.

Apart from Creba and the PCCL, the members of Bagcor are Employers Confederation of the Philippines, Metro Manila Chambers of Commerce and Industry, Philippine Constructors Association, Association of Makati Industries, the United Architects of the Philippines, Philippine Association of Hograisers Inc., National Federation of Hog Farmers Inc., Federation of Cattle Raisers Association of the Philippines and the United Broiler Raisers of the Philippines.

The World Bank, citing records of the Office of the Ombudsman, has reported that the Philippine government has lost some $31.5 billion, or around P1.2 trillion, in the last 25 years because of corruption.

This translates to some $31.5 billion, or around P48 billion, in leakage every year.

In a recent study, the Social Weather Stations reported that the Bureau of Internal Revenue and Bureau of Customs were the two most corrupt agencies of the government.

Transco completes P258-M relocation plan

By Ronnel W. Domingo

THE NATIONAL Transmission Corp. disclosed yesterday that it had completed a P258-million project to relocate lahar-affected transmission lines in Bacolor, Pampanga.

Transco vice president Winfredo Pangilinan said with the project's completion, the Luzon grid was now more reliable.

Lahar flows from Mount Pinatubo buried a number of steel towers and poles in Pampanga.

"In some areas, the steel towers carrying 230-kilovolt lines were half-buried in lahar," Pangilinan said.

The lines involved include those linking the Hermosa substation to those in San Jose, Bantawak and Mexico towns.

"This situation has also resulted in frequent line trippings (power outages) due to increased proximity of the lines to growing vegetation underneath them," Pangilinan added.

The relocation project, which was started in 1997, involved the construction of 42 steel towers and 30 steel poles. The lines account for a combined length of 20 kilometers.

Pangilinan said the new towers and poles used deeper and stronger foundations that were more suited to the unstable soil of lahar-filled areas.

Transco president Alan Ortiz said in March that the firm expected to have sold by yearend some of its subtransmission assets spread across the nation.

Ortiz said the state-run firm was in talks with 12 distribution utilities for the sale of the assets, which were valued at a total of P8.9 billion.

He explained that subtransmission systems were those linking Transco's high-voltage transmission lines and the utilities' distribution lines.

BSP studies 7-yr booking of SPV-related losses

By Doris C. Dumlaog

THE BANGKO Sentral ng Pilipinas is planning to allow banks to book for seven years losses that they may incur for transferring assets to special-purpose vehicles, according to persons familiar with the matter.

If approved, the plan is expected to make banks more flexible when raising their capital base.

In an interview yesterday, BSP Deputy Governor Alberto Reyes disclosed that central bank officials were already consulting the Bankers Association of the Philippines, Chamber of Thrift Banks and Rural Bankers Association of the Philippines about the proposal.

In a separate interview, BAP executive director Leonilo Coronel said banks were amenable to the central bank's proposal.

The BSP is set to issue a new circular on how banks must treat transactions involving special-purpose vehicles.

The central bank wants to ensure that banks planning to get rid of their non-performing assets, including foreclosed assets and non-performing loans, will have enough capital to absorb possible losses from the sale of these assets at a discount.

Investors planning to create special-purpose vehicles to take out banks' assets are usually keen on buying assets at steep discounts.

Cash outlays are normally equivalent to 20 to 30 percent of the assets' book value, while the rest of the payment is usually in the form of long-term notes or subordinated debts.

Coronel said securities that would remain in a bank's books as part of the asset transfer would still have inherent value during the first year of the sale.

He said debt papers could further improve in value once the special-purpose vehicle proponents were successful in the rehabilitation of the companies whose loans had been transferred by banks.

He said under the proposed guidelines, banks would still regularly mark-to-market debt papers based on appraisals by auditors accredited by the central bank.

DOF to go up against bid to derail VAT on banks

By Elena R. Torrijos

THE DEPARTMENT of Finance said yesterday it would go up against a thrift bank's bid to derail the implementation of the value-added tax on banks and other financial institutions.

"It is not by choice. For as long as that is the law, it is our responsibility to implement it," Finance Secretary Jose Isidro Camacho said in an interview.

The finance department is asking Congress to pass a law that will retain the gross receipts tax on banks in view of the more costly VAT.

On Tuesday, Real Bank Inc. asked the Quezon City Regional Trial Court to declare as unconstitutional provisions of the National Internal Revenue Code and revenue regulations of the Bureau of Internal Revenue implementing the 10-percent VAT on financial institutions.

Camacho disclosed that the finance department would re-submit to Congress this week a proposal to retain the GRT now imposed on banks and other financial institutions in lieu of the VAT.

He explained the finance department's position had always been in favor of the GRT over the VAT, except that Congress threw a monkey wrench into the plan when it also exempted professionals from the VAT.

The finance department has maintained that it would rather live with the "administrative nightmare" of the VAT on financial institutions than allow the exemption of professionals from the VAT.

Other banks are expected to support Real Bank's case.

"Hopefully we will have the TRO by Friday," Real Bank president Reynaldo Sarmiento said in an interview yesterday.

Among ancient Filipinos, the egg was sacred enough to figure in peace pacts

THE JOYFUL Cook was enjoying the last spoonfuls of Arroz con Crema.

"This cinnamon and lemon-rind flavored pudding made with thickest cream is the highlight of Easter cuisine for me," she told Saint Sandok, the talking cooking spoon she inherited from her grand aunt. "It's not easy to make, needing six hours of simmering over extremely low heat so each rice grain absorbs as much cream as possible, but Easter Sunday would not be the same for me. Its plain version made with milk is an everyday postre and not festival fare as far as I'm concerned."

"Today we think of Easter as ending on Resurrection Sunday, but it used to be celebrated for three days with special food like your arroz stretching into Tuesday," Sandok recalled. "Then on the next Saturday and Sunday, patrons hosted an annual overnight open-house event at which they served fiesta food," recalled Sandok. "In-

"When you were in Lola Uning's kitchen, did she ever think of Easter bunnies made of egg white or marshmallow like the ones sold now?" TJG wondered

"Bunnies were associated with Easter in the Philippines only when the American colonial period settled in," Sandok replied. "Spanish era Easter was a devout Christian affair where passion plays and processions took center-stage. American Easter practices were more secular than old Spanish customs."

YOU BORN TODAY: You have much physical strength in your approach to life. You go after what you want. You are dynamic, enthusiastic and purposeful. Others notice your energy when you are present. You are courageous and will defend your beliefs and the rights of others. Expect more solitude this year to learn something important.

Birthdate of: Ella Fitzgerald, singer; Renee Zaiweger, actress; Al Pacino, actor.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Subtle, spiritual revelations could occur to you today. In a completely different vein, surprise contacts with the government or large institutions might also take place.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20): Surprise news from above—bosses, parents or teachers—makes you sit up and listen today. The net result is that you want more freedom, more independence and more out of life.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22): You are pleased to discover that a small gift, an advantage, the use of somebody else's resources or some kind of perk is yours today. (It's nice to get goodies.)

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Expect to meet someone unusual today. This person could eventually become a friend who is a bit of a character—but likable. You most certainly will learn something new from this person.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22): Unexpected opportunities to travel, expand your education or take advanced training in something might come your way today. If they appeal to you, say yes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22): Conversations with partners and close friends are unusually lively today. Perhaps others shock you, or you shock them. (It's small stuff, really.)

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Be open to new technology or new methods of doing things at work. Resistance to new ways is one of the first signs that you are getting old.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Coy flirtations and pleasant conversations that make your heart beat faster might take place today. New love could enter your life. If so, it will be sudden and with someone who is quite different.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Unexpected guests drop in today at home. Or perhaps unusual news arrives on your doorstep. You have nothing to fear. It will be something lighthearted and playful.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19): New contacts and fresh faces make this a lively, memorable day. Someone could introduce you to an attractive person. (Be still, your beating heart.)

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18): Expect to make sudden, impulsive purchases for home or family members today. This could be something that is technological or very modern. You feel bold and experimental buying whatever it is.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20): You feel restless, jumpy and excited today. You want to talk to others and have a good time. And why not? Life is short—make the most of it.

Solution to dust-related miseries

DUST is bad for asthmatics and folks with respiratory problems. But the mites that thrive on dust are even worse and may cause serious health problems. Lyme disease and allergies are some of the worst. Dustborne mites are also responsible for itchy welts that cause a lot of discomfort and sleepless nights.

The following experience by Cecille Dinglasan of cengayhs61@edsamail.com.ph may just be the solution to dust-related miseries suffered by many of us. She wrote: "Equipped with their wet vacuum gear, the three-man crew sent to us by a housecleaning outfit siphoned off the dust that have accumulated for years in mattresses, pillows and possible dust bins. The dust mite busters also did a good job of cleaning the interior of our van. They stopped regularly to check for dust residues and quit only when there were no more perceivable dust mites. I sleep soundly now and don't suffer from itchy allergy."

We called the company and found out that it is one of the reputable cleaning outfits in town recommended by a known pulmonary doctor to patients suffering from dust-related allergies. Owned and managed by couple Michael and Amar Puyat, Super Cleaners Company specializes in dust-mite cleanup. They use water-based vacuum cleaners that suck the dust into containers. Unlike the traditional dry vacuum cleaner, the water-based unit makes sure that the dust will not fly around the room.

"We do deep extraction of dust up to 10 inch-deep," Amar Puyat explained. She added that typical house mites have a 10-day life cycle but the female is prolific and lays a lot of eggs to perpetuate the species. They thrive in hot and humid places and feed on dust and dry skin flakes among others, she added. For more information, call Puyat at 821-6060 or 0917-6951855 (24-hour text hotline).

Water-shortage misery

Pinky Sinfuego of Dangay Street, Project 7, QC, is in distress. Every household in her neighborhood didn't have a drop of water from the taps for three weeks. She herself spent a fortune on water deliveries just to keep her business going. For three weeks, she had been calling Maynilad. It was only shortly before the Lenten season when the technical staff of Maynilad-Roosevelt branch responded to the pleas of Sinfuego. They delivered water rations to the neighborhood.

"It's not sufficient to meet our basic needs. Needless to say, it's not also enough to keep our business going," she complained. She pleads with Maynilad Water Company to do something.

Cable trouble in Cainta

Mina Umali, a Sky Cable subscriber complained: "With no prior notice, our cable provider cut off all the services in our area at RSG Gueventhones in Cainta. I have paid my quarterly dues in advance. I have called up Sky Cable and followed up several times, but the people concerned obviously avoided my calls."

The only explanation offered by Sky Cable was that there were several illegal connections in the area, so they were constrained to disconnect all lines there. The very least Sky Cable can do to its honest subscribers, next to refunding, is to inform subscribers whether or not the service will be resumed. As Mina Umali wrote, "Had Sky Cable informed us, we could have discussed the matter with the homeowners' association."

More comments on credit card collectors

Anne N. Kaquiala (annesqu@yahoo.com) commented that in the name of good customer service, credit card companies should take action to correct the obnoxious methods employed by their collection agencies.

She added the following observation: "Credit card companies earn more by keeping their customers in debt. This is why they allow, and implicitly encourage, customers to pay only the minimum amount due. If customers pay up all their debts due to aggressive collection, what business will they have?"

"Apart from membership fee, the creditor is charged 3-3.50 percent monthly compounded interest. Surely, credit card companies are well compensated for all the costs and risks on the money they lend out. In this sense, harassment, pressure and annoyance employed by their collection agencies are unethical, uncalled for, and should not be tolerated."

From concerned consumer (name withheld upon request): "Credit card companies encourage the public to be in debt. Why, for instance, do some companies issue their cardholders unsolicited extra credit cards? I am a Visa cardholder who received an unsolicited Mastercard and been billed an annual membership fee for it. What's more incredible, the company sent me a formal letter reminding me that I have not sent my payment for the Mastercard bill!"

doing about these abuses to credit card holders? In connection with the issue you raised about obnoxious credit card collectors, I fully support a legislative action against the unfair practice."

Greenhills parking fee

The complaint of Lita Cruz (litacc41@yahoo.com) against exorbitant parking fees charged recently by Greenhills shopping complex drew a lot of feedback from customers. Effective March 31, the parking fee was raised from a flat rate of P20 to P20 for the first three hours, P10 per hour thereafter.

Cruz wrote: "We senior citizens who leisurely spend very long hours at the establishments there don't deserve to pay the exorbitant parking fees. If the Greenhills management cannot be persuaded to lower the parking fee, they can perhaps give discounts to senior citizens who drive their own car."

Dodo Angus of BF Homes Parañaque commented that the reasonable parking fee charged by Greenhills Shopping Complex in the past used to be one of the reasons why more shoppers patronized the establishments than they did neighboring malls. The new fees would no doubt drive away customers.

Angus added: "There is one section in Alabang Town Center where the flat rate is only P10. In addition to that, there's a 50 percent senior citizen discount. In the name of goodwill to its customers, the management of Greenhills shopping complex ought to at least give senior citizen car drivers their rightfully deserved discount."

Smoking at malls

Joseph Ruego wrote: "Whatever happened to the municipal ordinance passed by local government units—Manila, Quezon City, Mandaluyong, and others—against smoking in public and closed-in places? Why does the Megamall management condone smoking? Specifically, smokers are allowed near escalators, where a lot of people pass and are exposed to secondhand smoke."

SEATTLE'S Best Coffee introduces new additions to its selection of complete meals

Caesar's Salad combines Caesar dressing, Romaine lettuce, crunchy croutons, crisp bacon bits and parmesan cheese. A mix of tuna flakes, potatoes, green beans and olives set on a bed of lettuce with light Italian dressing makes Salad Nicoise an instant favorite. Easter used

mal is Holy Thursday's Lamb of God celebration. In Morong, Rizal, a lamb made from mashed camote and condensed milk is carried in a charming procession. When no one knew how a lamb looked—there being few, if any, lambs around and just a few pictures of it—the lamb could resemble anything with four legs that was then covered with cotton balls.

"When the lamb was cut up after its Church blessing and eaten to symbolize Christ's sacrifice, cotton fluff stuck in one's teeth was a common complaint. Today one simply uses an imported copper or plastic mold of a lamb."

"Making a cordero big enough to feed the barrio takes lots of ingredients and muscle to make. It's like cooking jalea, if not worse, because the result has to be white, not scorched," Sandok explained.

Colored eggs

"Because eggs were not allowed during the 40-day fast before Easter, those kept for eating after Easter were coated with wax to help preserve them. Dyeing them different colors made them attractive," said TJC.

"But that custom along with egg hunts did not reach the Philippines till American times," Sandok remarked. "In pre-colonial days, herbolarios in Leyte used eggs to cure. In Ilocos, thanksgiving rites required the first fruits of harvest, an assortment of cooked foods and always eggs. In Benguet, a widow's basket always has eggs that after the funeral are eaten by her as part of a purification ritual."

"I read in the chronicles of the first Spanish Governor-General of the Philippines, Miguel Lopez de Legaspi, that eggs were vital when cleansing a member of a community liberated from captivity. After bathing in the sea or river, the celebrant knelt to receive a dousing of coconut water from a priestess, then an egg yolk poured over his head, and finally a bath," TJC recalled.

"Many philosophers have seen the egg as emblematic of the world's four elements," said Sandok. "The shell is earth, the white, water; the yolk, fire; and air is under the shell at one end."

"I also remember that among ancient Filipinos, the egg was sacred enough to figure in peace pacts," TJC added. "Each participant took an egg in his hand, and while crushing it to pieces recited: 'May he who does not keep his word be destroyed in a like manner.' The egg was deemed so powerful among Maranaw at one time that when trying to catch a thief, an egg would be broken over a fire in the belief that the culprit would then be blinded, wherever he might be."

Post Easter provisions

The Joyful Cook spied her neighbor's rooster strutting about in her kitchen herb patch, followed by a harem of hens and their chicks. "Oh dear, there he goes again, tramping up the curly parsley and munching on the newly sown basil seeds," she said.

"Don't fret," Sandok said. "If all you've said about eggs is true then it will help to let Aling Nena know you're letting her fowl roam in your backyard."

With that there was a voice from beyond the bamboo fence calling home the brood and shouting instructions to send a basket of fresh eggs from the free-range chickens to TJC.

"Now you can send a dozen eggs and order special bibungka from Aling Rosa," said Saint Sandok, looking forward to old-fashion richness as found in a traditional merienda, stove-top cake made with galapong. "We've got to protect our food traditions, and that's not just ingredients but methods and tastes," he added, knowing he'd be party to an outstanding Philippine high tea shortly with TJC's nod of approval.

Three towers of power. Three towers on a continuous podium level define The Columns, Ayala Avenue. Each tower will have 30 storeys, 23 of which will be residential. The five-level upper ground parking is shielded from the outside by an artwork that gives the building prominence along Ayala and Buendia Avenues.

The layout maximizes the advantages of its prominent site, which allows more units to be facing the morning sun while avoiding the afternoon heat. Natural lighting and good ventilation are also taken into consideration in each of the studio, one-bedroom and two-bedroom residential units - a rare feature among residential condominiums.

To create a more open feel for space, select units even have bay windows: others have balconies overlooking the city. The top three levels will house very private units, which have breath-taking scenery.

The Recreational Club, which stretches across the 7th floor podium of all three towers, provides residents a source of recreation and an ideal venue for socializing with other residents. It has a 25-meter adults' lap pool, kids' pool, spacious function rooms with spill-over area, a gym, game room with mini-theater, daycare center with indoor and outdoor play area, cooriana, wine cellar, jogging path and transient rooms for the residents' guests almost like a hotel!

IN the summer of 1999, Cecille Ysmael and hubby Louie went to the south of France for a brief vacation. On the way to Saint-Tropez, the aromatic smell and sight of roasted chicken sold on street corners was so irresistible the couple bought a whole piece.

"In the south of France, they roast chicken like Andok's chicken here," says 33-year-old Ysmael. "The chicken was so good, very tasty and flavorful because of the herbs used."

When the couple returned to Manila, Ysmael, who's known by family and friends to be a good cook, went straight to the kitchen and tried to duplicate the roast chicken from Provence.

"Without bragging, I got the same fragrant smell and savory taste right away," Ysmael proudly says. Although she has had no formal culinary training, Ysmael can easily identify the herbs, spices and other ingredients that go into every dish she eats.

Ysmael started cooking at 16. "I enjoy cooking and when Louie became my boyfriend in 1997, he encouraged me to go into real cooking by learning the different

DOME Chicken and Mushroom Pie

DOME Carrot Cake

Have a Java

Text by Rowena C. Burgos

There's more to Dome Café than cups of coffee—salads, sandwiches, pasta, pizza, quesadilla, cakes, even live music on certain nights

CAFES and restaurants are discovering they can keep guests for an entire evening—for a meal and after-dinner entertainment—as they add live musical performances to their menu. Dome Café has done just that.

"Java Nights Live is our way of introducing the new bar concept," said Patricia Riingen, general manager of Dome Café. "Through Java Nights, we aim to present Dome as the place for the ideal nightcap or a venue for friends to unwind. Also, it's a way to showcase what our local talents have to offer."

Java Nights offers a complete evening for Dome's guests. "They have dinner, and then they can stay for music and dancing. They don't have to go anywhere else," Riingen continued.

At Dome Café Shangri-La, diners can watch Noel Cabangon on Thursdays, Acoustic Dreams on Fridays and Mitch on Saturdays while at Dome Café Podium, it's Noel Cabangon on Mondays and Mitch on Tuesdays. First set starts at 8:30 p.m. At Dome Café Solidmills Building in Legaspi Village, Makati, program starts at 8 p.m.

Finding success with the combo approach, Riingen says the combination appeals to three target markets. "One is the diner who wants adventurous cuisine. Then there are the music lover and the customer who wants to both dine and be entertained. We've created a one-stop shop, in a way."

Morning tradition

Bottomless, steaming cups of hot Java are a longstanding morning tradition, but that's changing. People increasingly are drinking coffee, but they're drinking it differently. Hot drip coffee is still the norm, but now it has been joined on breakfast tables by iced coffee, flavored coffee and espresso drinks. Specialty coffees are on the rise, too.

"Coffee is the crown to a meal," said Riingen. "If customers get a bad cup of coffee, that's the last thing they'll remember. And if they have a good cup of coffee, they'll have an overall better impression of a café or restaurant."

Obviously, coffee is huge in the Philippines right now. And many companies such as Dome have been setting the pace.

"As people become familiar with paying P65 for a cup of coffee, it becomes possible for retailers to do more with that P65," Riingen said. So better coffee has become available as consumers have come to demand it. "I think that more and more people are identifying themselves as specialty coffee and gourmet coffee drinkers."

She notes, however, that consumers who like flavored coffee don't reserve it for special occasions; they also drink it as part of breakfast on a regular basis.

Although gourmet coffee does not generally come in bottomless cups, Riingen points out that gourmet coffee drinkers are more likely to drink larger cups of coffee—more than 8 ounces—than traditional consumers.

But even in the world of mainstream coffee, consumption is on the rise, according to Riingen.

The public seems to have changed its view of iced coffee in particular, which used to be a seasonal drink, popular only during the summer months. Now it seems to be more an everyday alternative to hot coffee or soda.

Treats

Dome Café, the Australian franchise famous for its wide selection of gourmet food and fine coffee, is open daily, 7 a.m.-11 p.m., for breakfast, lunch and dinner.

All breakfast sets come with a choice of Long Black/Flat White/Cappuccino, Tea by the cup, Hot Chocolate, Chococcino, Fruit Juice or oversized Iced Tea.

Its starters include soups, Papadams, Smoked Salmon Platter, Croque Monsieur, Riblets.

Aside from hot and iced beverage, Dome also proffers salads, gourmet sandwiches, hot kitchen and Asian specials, gourmet pies and pizzas, quesadillas, pasta, vegetarian selections, cakes and desserts and ice cream.

Dome Café also has lunch buffet offerings until April 30. Diners can create their own salad from the salad bar and have their fill of pastas and other treats for P198. Or upgrade their lunch buffet to P248 and they can have a refillable glass of iced tea and dessert in addition to the buffet selection. This is available at Dome Greenbelt, Mondays-Fridays, 11 a.m.-2:30 p.m.

At Dome Café Shangri-La, you can feast on roast beef, salads and pasta selections for P350 every Saturday and Sunday, 11 a.m.-2:30 p.m.

cuisines and other famous specialties," she says.

Her favorite is Thai food—curries, phad thai and tom yang goong—as well as the Singaporean Hainanese chicken. Spanish cuisine comes next—tapas, paella, callos and gambas al ajillo. Ysmael can also whip up a mean kare-kareng pata using Lady's Choice peanut butter and malagkit rice to make the dish creamier. She also cooks her own ginisang bagoong.

Chicken specialty

Ysmael likes to cook for friends, serving them her French, Spanish, Chinese and Japanese specialties. But she is most proud of her baked chicken that always gets raves from family and friends.

Poulet Provençal, Ysmael's famed baked chicken, was inspired by the roast chicken she once tasted at Saint-Tropez. However, instead of roasting the chicken, she bakes it giving it a different taste and texture.

Poulet Provençal is a spring chicken stuffed with tomatoes, olives, garlic and capsicum and baked to perfection. "The secret is in the herbs and spices," reveals Ysmael.

She uses herbes de Provence, an aromatic mixture of dried rosemary, thyme, lavender and other seasonings common to Provençal cooking. It is available in many supermarket spice racks, including Santi's Deli.

Ysmael also adds zucchini or courgettes for stuffing. "The tender chicken also gets the flavoring from its own

A combination of herbs collectively known as herbes de Provence gives Poulet Provençal its unique taste juices and vegetables."

Kitchen creations

Ysmael and her husband run the popular V Bar (formerly Venezia) at Glorietta 1, Ayala Center, where she keeps busy in the kitchen. "I help in the kitchen, teaching the staff some new dishes."

Most of the pasta recipes at V Bar menu are actually hers, including the tuna pasta, sardines pasta and arrabbiata. Her creations are usually as colorful and elaborately composed as fine art, tasting even better than they look.

Ysmael's inspiration comes from a wide range of sources—magazines, books and travels. She seems at peace when she's in the kitchen, deriving pure pleasure from being wife to Louie. She says her husband's very responsible, loving, thoughtful and caring. Even though he's very busy with his work, he finds time to join her for dinner.

As much as possible, the Ysmaels try to keep their evenings free for an intimate dinner for two at home. A typical dinner consists of soup, salad, two or three main dishes and a dessert. "It's never one main dish. We love to eat and we like variety," she says.

During her yearly trips abroad, Ysmael keeps up with trends by dining in different classy restaurants. The exercise helps improve her culinary skills.

Like her Poulet Provençal, her baked chicken continues to win praises from people who get the chance to taste it. "It's a totally different dish, another recipe to add to our growing list of baked chicken variations," says Ysmael.

Because of my thinning hair, I became envious of people who could style their thick hair easily. I wanted a fuller look to restore the crowning glory of my hair. With Svenson's Non-Surgical Hair Integration Method, more hair was added to give it a lush, thick look. I can naturally style it and even swim with it. In fact, this is how my own hair would really look if I didn't experience hair loss in the first place!

"My crowning glory was restored with more hair!"
